A Myrdae Campaign Setting Supplement

Overview

Emberstran is a coastal city located in the eastern region of Orbansia, along the shores of the Glimmering Sea and nestled just south of the Severed Crease. The city lies not far from Mount Emberstran, an unrest volcano whose eruption during the Awakening transformed the surrounding landscape. Though once threatened with destruction, Emberstran survived and has since thrived, bolstered by the fertile volcanic soil ideal for grape cultivation. Today, Emberstran is a major producer of wine and a hub for trade, with goods flowing in and out via its bustling port.

The city is divided into two main districts. The southern port district is crowded and lively, packed with warehouses, docks, taverns, shops, and dense housing for the working class. Fog frequently rolls in from the Glimmering Sea and settles here, giving the area a mysterious, moody atmosphere. The northern district is elevated and home to the city's wealthier citizens, filled with manors, finely kept gardens, and broad cobbled roads. The lord of Emberstran resides in a grand estate on a central hill that overlooks the entire port. Emberstran is protected by a high stone wall, while rural homes, vineyards, and farmland sprawl just beyond the city's boundaries.

In Emberstran, the scent of salt and wine hangs in the air. The city rises against the coast, framed by the looming Severed Crease to the north and the distant slopes of Mount Emberstran. Outside its tall stone walls, rows of vineyards stretch across the fertile land, dotted with quaint farmsteads. The bustling Port District to the south side of the city hums with trade, fog drifting through tight alleys and along the piers, while the northern district gleams with fine homes and rising terraces. At the heart of it all, a grand estate of the lord sits on a hill.

History

Before the Awakening, Emberstran was known as Winbalt, a growing town nestled near the northeastern stretch of the forested area known as the Baltwood. Life in Winbalt was humble, shaped by the resources of the nearby forest.

During the Awakening, a series of dramatic natural events reshaped the region. Mount Emberstran, long dormant to the northeast, erupted violently, scarring the landscape and displacing many in the surrounding foothills. Simultaneously, Glimmerstone Deep, a large inland lake to the south, surged and expanded into the newly formed Glimmering Sea, consuming much of the Baltwood Forest and transforming the coast.

As surrounding settlements were destroyed or made uninhabitable, refugees poured into Winbalt. The influx of people brought new trade, talent, and resources, and the town quickly expanded. Recognizing its transformation, the town renamed itself Emberstran—symbolizing both the fiery mark left by the volcano and its emergence as a beacon on the Glimmering Sea.

Over the decades, the city embraced its new identity. The volcanic soil enriched the land, birthing vineyards and agriculture that fueled the city's prosperity. The port along the Glimmering Sea brought trade and opportunity, transforming Emberstran into a bustling coastal city that continues to grow and thrive in the post-Awakening era.

Citizenry

Emberstran's population is diverse, reflecting its status as a bustling port city that prospered after the Awakening. Humans make up the majority of the populace, but halflings, elves, and dwarves are a frequent sight. Tieflings, gnomes, goliaths, gabüks, and dragonborn also call the city home, though they are fewer in number and tend to stand out more in public spaces.

The majority of Emberstran's residents fall into a middle-class lifestyle, with reliable work related to fishing, farming, wine production, trade, and craftsmanship. The port district contains most of the city's lower-class citizens and a visible homeless population, especially near the docks and warehouses. In contrast, the elevated northern district boasts estates and refined homes for the city's wealthiest families and influential figures. The city is generally welcoming, but tensions sometimes flare over class divides or the presence of uncommon races, depending on the neighborhood.

Holidays and Traditions

Emberfast

Each year on the first day of Vaegrum, the people of Emberstran celebrate Emberfast—a holiday marking the transformation of their humble town of Winbalt into the city of Emberstran. Citizens light hundreds of lanterns and fire basins along the walls and streets of the city, casting a warm glow to mirror the fire of Mount Emberstran. Bonfires are lit near the port, where storytelling contests are held about the “day the world changed.” Children wear painted ember masks and carry small bells to “awaken the spirit of the city,” while families share ash-cakes—flatbread charred just slightly at the edges, symbolic of survival and renewal.

The noble families host a Fire's Ascent Ball, where attendees wear fiery hues, and dancers move in spirals to mimic the rising heat of rebirth. The Lord of Emberstran traditionally offers a speech atop the wall, recounting the legacy of Winbalt and honoring those lost during the Awakening.

Murkroot Eve

Murkroot Eve is a quiet, haunting festival that remembers the deep forests of the Baltwood, much of which was swallowed during the Awakening. Inspired by old stories from woodcutters and druids, this holiday is steeped in superstition and folkloric ritual. On the eve of the first full moon of Endelo'ar in Talil (the 27th), families gather branches of blackthorn or ash and hang them above their doors to keep away “the Murk,” a creeping forest spirit said to search for lost woods to reclaim.

Children don masks of bark, moss, or antlers and parade through the streets in eerie silence, while elders whisper old tales of spirits, dryads, and woodland trials. A common treat is rootcake, a dark, spiced cake baked with root vegetables, mushrooms, and sometimes a bitter herb thought to ward off ill omens.

In wealthier circles, nobles might hire performers to enact traditional Baltwood tales—like “The Birch Maiden Who Wept Blood” or “The Laughing Hart of Hollow Hill.” Some say strange lights can be seen in the sky or drifting across the Glimmering Sea on Murkroot Eve—and few dare to follow them.

Knock Twice for Vine’s Blessing

“Knock once, your wine turns bitter. Knock twice, the vintage flows.”

In winemaking circles, there’s a tradition of knocking twice on a barrel or cask before drawing wine from it, a superstition believed to bless the pour. Some vintners extend this to vineyard gates, wagons of grapes, or even glasses before a toast. It’s said the ritual honors ancient vineyard spirits who made the land fertile after Mount Emberstran’s eruption.

Government

Emberstran is a free city governed by an elected official every six years, known as the Lord Protector or Lady Protector. As of the year 1246, the city is under the leadership of Lord Garod Dusklight, a pragmatic and charismatic figure known for balancing the city’s interests with minimal interference.

The Lord Protector is supported by a Council of Five, each responsible for a specific area of city governance:

- ▶ The Magistrate – Oversees legal disputes, criminal verdicts, and justice throughout the city.
- ▶ The Collector – Manages taxation, trade tariffs, and revenue collection for Emberstran.
- ▶ The Advisor – A knowledgeable scholar or mage who provides guidance on historical precedent, magical matters, and arcane affairs.
- ▶ The Minister – Handles public relations, religious counsel, and morale among the citizenry, often working with temples and spiritual leaders.
- ▶ The Hand – A shadowy but essential figure who maintains a web of informants throughout the city, particularly in the Port District, taverns, and trade networks.

Lord Garod Dusklight

Lord Garod Dusklight is a large man in fine silvery plate mail, black wavy hair swept back and a trimmed beard. Draped across his shoulders is a deep ember-colored cape.

Lord Garod Dusklight is a broad-shouldered, husky man in his middle years. His black wavy hair and full, well-trimmed beard give him a noble presence, complemented by the silver plate mail he often wears—even within city walls. His ember-colored cape marks his office as Lord Protector of Emberstran. Garod is known for his commanding voice, dignified bearing, and no-nonsense approach to leadership. He prefers decisive action and surrounds himself with a trusted council, though he keeps his own counsel close.

No City Militia

Emberstran has no standing army or formal city guard. Instead, the Lord Protector and three appointed captains hire and coordinate bands of mercenaries who enforce the law, patrol the districts, and defend against external threats. These hired swords operate under specific contracts and are rotated based on need and reliability.

Laws

Emberstran operates under a structured set of city ordinances, designed to maintain order and fairness within its growing and diverse population. The enforcement of law is handled by hired mercenaries, who serve under the direction of Lord Garod Dusklight and his three appointed Captains. These mercenaries patrol the city's districts, maintain peace, and detain those suspected of criminal acts.

Characters engaging in criminal activity are arrested by the hired mercenary patrol and charged per the City Ordinances. When an individual is accused of breaking a law, they are not immediately sentenced. Instead, they are brought before an appointee of the Magistrate, who serves as the city's arbiter of justice. These appointees—trained in local law and authorized to pass judgment—hold short hearings to determine guilt and punishment. Trials are often swift but fair, with more complex cases escalated to the Magistrate directly.

While bribes and influence occasionally sway minor decisions, the general populace sees the system as functional and efficient—especially when compared to cities without any central justice. In cases of repeat or severe offenses, public hearings may be held in the town square as a display of justice, and punishments can include hefty fines, exile, labor assignments, or imprisonment in the city's fortified holding cells.

Economy and Trade

Emberstran's economy thrives on its position as a coastal trade hub and its fertile volcanic soil, which makes the surrounding land ideal for vineyards. The city's prosperity is supported by a wide variety of local businesses, skilled artisans, and merchants, but it is largely structured around three prominent trade guilds that dominate commerce and industry: the Vintner’s Guild, the Shipbuilders’ Guild, and the Fisher’s Consortium.

Professional Guilds

The Vintner’s Guild benefits from the rich, ash-fed soil around Mount Emberstran, producing wines that are in high demand across Myrdae. They manage vineyard operations, regulate wine quality, and oversee exports, wielding considerable influence over the local economy and seasonal festivals.

The Shipbuilders’ Guild oversees the construction and repair of vessels at Emberstran’s shipyards, with designs tailored for both trade and fishing. Their craftsmanship is renowned across the Glimmering Sea, and their work ensures a steady flow of income from merchants and naval interests.

The Fisher’s Consortium maintains the city’s connection to the sea, organizing fishing routes, markets, and preservation practices. They control the majority of seafood trade in the region, supplying not only Emberstran but other settlements along the coast.

These guilds work in coordination with the city’s leadership, paying dues and taxes that support infrastructure, defense, and public services. While independent trades still flourish, the guilds provide structure, employment, and economic strength, making them essential pillars in Emberstran’s thriving coastal economy.

Guild	Guild Leader	Description
Fisher’s Consortium	Marisa Winbrook	female human, short brown hair, brown eyes; welcoming and warm
Shipbuilder’s Guild	Janri Torwell	male human, sandy mid-length hair, clean shaven, no-frills attitude
Vintner’s Guild	Tarathial Rulendor	female high elf, silver-streaked auburn hair and emerald eyes; stern and pragmatic

Religion

The people of Emberstran honor a wide range of deities, and small shrines to nearly every god of Myrdae can be found tucked throughout the city. However, three gods stand above the rest in local devotion: Crael, Ossanna, and Diverra.

- Crael, the Soulbearer, is revered for his dominion over fate and death—an ever-present reality in a city once nearly destroyed by natural disaster. Many believe Crael’s guidance brought order from the chaos of the Awakening, and his worship is closely tied to Emberstran’s reverence for legacy, remembrance, and the delicate balance between life and death.

- ▶ Osanna, Lady Luck, is the goddess of fortune and chance. Her worship thrives in a city reliant on trade winds, open seas, and the ever-unpredictable flow of commerce. Merchants, gamblers, and travelers alike offer her tokens in the hopes of catching her favor—especially in the fog-veiled port district where fortune can shift as quickly as the tide.
- ▶ Diverra, the goddess of love and beauty, is celebrated in the vineyards and public gardens of the city, where her blessings are said to influence both fertile lands and hearts. Her presence is most strongly felt during the festival season, when wine flows freely and romantic tales blossom under the moonlight of the Glimmering Sea.

Notable Locations

Anchor Point

Anchor Point is a well-known and frequently visited inn and tavern located on the corner of the Grand Pier in Emberstran’s Docks. Its location offers a prime view of the harbor and serves as a hub for visiting sailors, merchants, and travelers awaiting transport across the Glimmering Sea. The tavern itself is a stout, square structure of salt-stained stone and heavy timber, with broad windows that look out toward the water. The inn extends in two wings—one west and one north—housing nearly two dozen modest but secure rooms. The establishment is run by a former sailor named Calro Tunn, a one-eyed half-elf known for fair prices and a strict policy against dockside brawls. The interior is often filled with the sounds of sea shanties, clinking mugs, and the scent of spiced stew. Anchor Point is a reliable location to gather rumors, overhear sailor gossip, or find passage to distant shores.

The scent of salt and spiced ale greets you as you approach Anchor Point, perched firmly on the edge of the Grand Pier. Its sturdy walls and broad windows overlook the harbor, offering a sweeping view of the ships bobbing in the harbor. Inside the tavern, the air is warm and lively. To the west and north, hallways stretch into the attached inn, where small but comfortable rooms offer a quiet place to sleep above the rhythm of the tides.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Calro Tunn	owner (commoner)	male half-elf A charismatic one-eyed half-elf with salt-and-pepper hair, a weathered face, and a crooked grin. He’s quick with a story and even quicker to settle disputes, using charm before fists.
Vessa Marrel	assistant (commoner)	female human A tall, auburn-haired woman with a sharp jawline and keen green eyes. Calm and observant, Vessa handles bookings and oversees the inn rooms. She’s the most no-nonsense of the group but cares deeply for regulars.
Lira Dalsen	assistant (commoner)	female human A petite woman with curly black hair, dimples, and brown eyes. She manages the tavern floor, quick with banter and quicker with a tray. Friendly, flirtatious, and always listening—she’s a favorite among sailors.
Hennah Coyle	assistant (commoner)	female human A curvy blonde with a loud laugh and booming voice, Hennah is the cook and sometimes bartender. She’s warm, motherly to the younger staff, but absolutely ruthless if you try to sneak a drink without paying. Most regulars know better than to cross her.

Cemetery

Emberstran’s primary cemetery spans the elevated eastern side of the city. The grounds are well-kept and expansive, filled with rows of graves marked by simple stones, ornate headstones, and family plots. The eastern edge of the cemetery meets the tall stone city wall, while the rest is enclosed by a wrought-iron fence with stone pillars at regular intervals. Lining the perimeter are old, wind-bent trees that offer ample shade and an ever-present rustling sound in the breeze. On the northeastern and eastern sides stand three mausoleums—used by Emberstran’s wealthiest families and historically significant figures—crafted of dark stone and decorated with carvings of flame motifs and ancestral heraldry.

The cemetery is often patrolled by hired caretakers, and while it is not officially consecrated, it is regarded as a respectful place where the dead are left undisturbed... most of the time.

The path bends upward to a quiet rise on Emberstran’s east side, where a broad cemetery stretches out. Iron fencing broken by moss-covered stone pillars wraps around most of the graveyard, while tall trees line the borders with rustling leaves that whisper in the sea breeze. Countless graves fill the grounds—some fresh, others ancient and crumbling. To the far side, near the city wall, rise three large mausoleums, their doors carved with intricate symbols.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Gerrin Thel	groundskeeper (commoner)	male half-elf Wiry with leathery skin, always in a soot-streaked overcoat and brimmed hat. Quiet and superstitious, with a deep respect for the dead.
Ezara Moonspark	gravestone sculptor (commoner)	female wood elf Pale with ink-stained fingers and silver hair tied in braids. Speaks in poetic riddles and views her work as sacred art.

Charum’s Oils

Charum’s Oils is a refined bath house nestled in the western side of Emberstran. The street-level structure is circular, with elegant stonework.

The bathhouse is run efficiently by Charum larra, supported by several well-trained attendants. Charum keeps a tight, tasteful operation, known for discretion and soothing service rather than indulgent vice.

The upper floor serves as a lounge and shop, offering an assortment of scented oils, balms, and perfumes made in-house. These oils are used by bathers after a soak to soften the skin, enhance one’s natural scent, or impress others with rare and exotic fragrances.

Inside, a spiral staircase leads down into a wide, naturally-formed cavern below the city where there is a series of three large bathing pools filled with warm water from a natural spring, each carved into the rock and maintained with care. Four private doors line the cavern walls, leading to smaller, more intimate sauna-like baths that require a separate fee. These rooms offer scented steam and enhanced privacy, often used by nobles or wealthy merchants.

The building is warm and fragrant as you step inside Charum’s Oils, with the scent of floral oils lingering in the air. Shelves of elegant glass bottles line the walls, each filled with colorful oils and perfumes. Attendants in light robes move with grace between visitors, offering towels and quiet service. A wide spiral staircase descends from the polished stone floor down into the softly lit cavern below.

When visiting the baths ...

Steam rises gently as you descend the stairs, where the sound of softly flowing water echoes. Three broad pools take up most of the cavern. Along the far cavern wall, four closed doors promise private and luxurious bathing.

Church to Crael

The Silent Veil serves as the primary place of worship for the god Crael within Emberstran. It sits quietly in the Southeast District, mere steps west of the cemetery, allowing it to serve not only as a place of prayer but as a point of passage for those mourning or tending to the dead. The priests of Crael offer guidance to grieving families, oversee burial rites, and provide spiritual counsel to those contemplating fate, destiny, or the afterlife. The church is known for its tranquil atmosphere, with services marked by soft chanting and the tolling of a muted bell. It also holds private chambers for quiet reflection and discussions regarding omens, dreams, or signs that may concern one’s fate.

Description for Players Approaching

Nestled along the quiet southern streets, the Church to Crael rises in solemn elegance. Built from carefully cut stone of varying shades of grey, its simple, angular form stands still and unmoving, as if defying the passage of time itself. The cemetery lies just beyond, its markers dotting the landscape like frozen echoes of lives once lived. A silver emblem of Crael—a sickle overlaid upon a balanced thread—hangs above the heavy wooden double doors.

Description for Players Entering

Inside, cool grey light filters through high arched windows of frosted glass, casting pale shadows across the stone floor. Long wooden pews are arranged with precise symmetry, leading toward a raised dais where a stone altar rests, inscribed with the etched spiral of fate. Atop the altar lies a polished sickle crossed over a small hourglass of slow-flowing black sand. The air is still, filled with the faint scent of aged parchment, candle wax, and dried lavender.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Priest Havric	priest (priest)	male human Bald, long grizzled beard, soft brown eyes, wearing finely embroidered grey vestments with the silver sickle of Crael upon his chest. Compassionate and calm, speaks of fate with humility and warmth, trusted by the people.

NPC	Role	Description
Vessira Noldren	acolyte (priest acolyte)	female high elf Slender, pale-skinned with silver-white hair; wears simple grey acolyte robes with minimal adornment. Curious and reverent, still learning, eager to understand omens and fate’s intricacies.
Yova Merns	acolyte (priest acolyte)	male half-orc Broad-shouldered, greenish-grey skin, short-cropped black hair, usually carrying a pouch of carved bone tokens. Quietly inquisitive, often tasked with preparing ceremonial tools, studies the signs diligently.

Spell Services

At the DM’s discretion, there may be spell services available as outlined in the Myrdae Reference for DMs.

City Gates

The Gates of Emberstran are the primary points of entry and regulation into the walled city. Each of the three gates are overseen by mercenary patrols contracted under Lord Garod Dusklight’s authority. All gates are embedded into Emberstran’s tall stone walls and monitored by rotating bands of hired swords, who maintain order, inspect goods, and track the flow of people entering or exiting. Each gate has a gatehouse, where administrative tasks and minor disputes are handled.

- Western Gate: The busiest and most trafficked gate. It is the main entry point for caravans, travelers, and trade wagons arriving via inland roads. The nearby Headless Hydra Inn makes it a natural waypoint for newcomers and common folk.
- Upper City Gate: This gate allows controlled access to Emberstran’s elevated northern district, where the city’s wealthiest citizens reside. Entry is highly regulated. It is often used by diplomats, noble families, and approved shipments bound for the noble quarter. Guards at this gate tend to be more experienced and better equipped, often handpicked by Captain Amilla Stassy.
- Southern Gate: Facing the fertile vineyards and farmland, the Southern Gate is the quietest of the three but still essential for agricultural traffic and seasonal harvest movement.

All three gates prominently display the Emberstran heraldry above the archways and on guard uniforms. Each is outfitted with an iron-reinforced portcullis, and during times of tension, additional bracing or magical wards may be applied to restrict access.

Approaching the Gates

You approach one of Emberstran’s three stone gates, each built into the high defensive wall that surrounds the city. Carved above the archway is the city’s heraldry: a volcano etched into a crimson-colored shield with a pointed top.

Hired guards in mismatched but functional armor keep a watchful eye, their expressions stern beneath flickering torches.

Entering the Gates

As you pass through the gate, the city unfurls before you—whether it's the fog-draped port district or the manicured streets of the upper city, Emberstran immediately feels alive. The sounds of carts, conversations, and distant sea birds mingle with the scent of salt, smoke, and wine.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Amilla Stassyrr	Captain - North (guard captain)	female human Sharp-featured and rigid in posture, Amilla oversees the upper gate with strict precision, favoring order and hierarchy.
Mordan Pass	Captain - Western (guard captain)	male human A broad-shouldered man in dusty scale armor with a faded red sash. Mordan is curt but fair, and knows the flow of traffic better than anyone.
Vammad Peakwarder	Captain - Southern (guard captain)	male stone goliath Towering and quiet, Vammad prefers to observe rather than speak. His stone-gray skin and stillness give him an almost statuesque presence.

The following unique items or services can be found here:

Item	Description	Cost
Mercenary Contract Board	A wooden notice board outside each gate allows independent mercenaries to apply for short-term contracts or report infractions. Occasionally lists escort jobs, posted bounties, or missing persons.	-
Toll	Carts and wagons entering the city must pay a toll for entrance.	1 sp
Toll Exemption Token	A silver-plated badge issued by the Collector’s office, used by noble caravans and certain guilds. While rare and respected, forgeries circulate—especially around the Western Gate.	10 sp

Crimson Swan (Inn)

The Crimson Swan Inn is a discreet, high-end establishment in Emberstran’s northern district, catering to wealthy residents and discerning travelers who value quiet luxury over public spectacle. With no flashy signage, the inn’s reputation is built on word-of-mouth among the city’s elite. The only exterior mark is a dark iron swan inlaid into the heavy oak front door.

The inn is run by the Shaed family: Annilia manages the business, while her husband Dairn keeps the place in good working order. Their two (2) adult children, Lia and Eneal are the hosts and servers.

The inn has a large layout, with three floors:

- The Tavern and Meeting Rooms – Reception area and a richly decorated dining hall, dimly lit for discretion. Soft lighting, rich fabrics, and eclectic imported décor encourage hushed conversations over candlelight rather than raucous entertainment. Two large meeting rooms are in the back for private conversations.
- Inn Rooms – Ten finely appointed guest rooms, each uniquely styled with a mix of imported fabrics, carved woods, and antique decor. All rooms feature private baths and heavy drapes for privacy.
- Lower Floor – Officially wine storage and maintenance, but also home to a hidden chamber used by the Cloak of Defiance. The chamber is accessed via a concealed stone panel, with a one-inch spyhole hidden in the wall of a nearby tunnel. The Shaeds claim ignorance of its use but knowingly permit the Cloak to operate here.

Approaching the inn...

On a quiet street in Emberstran’s northern district, you find a tall stone building with no sign above its arched entry. The only mark is a dark iron swan inlaid into the heavy oak door.

Entering the inn...

Inside, the air is warm and perfumed with oiled wood, aged wine, and a whisper of lavender. The lighting is soft, provided by wrought-iron sconces and a few low-hanging lanterns. The walls are adorned with mismatched but tastefully displayed art—elven masks, old maps, etc.—each piece hinting at a history known only to its collector.

Crusty Mug

The Crusty Mug is one of the most popular and frequently visited pubs in southeastern Emberstran, known for its lively crowds, potent drinks, and layered atmosphere. The establishment spans three levels and caters to a wide variety of clientele—from rowdy dockhands and traders to quiet aristocrats looking for a less formal venue.

Main Floor – The main floor is a standard fantasy-style pub: wooden tables, sawdust-covered floors, a roaring hearth, and a broad bar across the back wall. The air is often filled with boisterous laughter, off-key singing, and the scent of roasted meat and spilled ale. This is where most locals gather after dusk.

Second Floor – A left-side staircase leads to the second floor, where a doorman collects a 5 silver piece access fee. This level features finer wooden furniture, wall-mounted lanterns with colored glass, cushioned seating, and better service. Musicians sometimes perform here, and the patrons are generally wealthier or seeking more privacy.

Gambler's Den – Beneath the main staircase is a concealed door that hides a staircase that leads to a high stakes gambling room in the basement. Access is restricted to those on the list or who know the right words. Velvet curtains, oil lamps, and padded chairs surround tables for dice, cards, and other games of chance.

The pub is operated by a savvy halfling named Redegar Diggiepot, who knows how to cater to both the working class and high rollers. He manages the main floor himself and employs a small staff of bartenders, floor servers, and bouncers. The gambling area is overseen by his no-nonsense cousin, Grace Diggiepot, who ensures the house always gets its share.

Approaching the Crusty Mug

The Crusty Mug rises in the center of a street block, its broad wooden sign carved with a frothy tankard half-tilted. Laughter and clinking mugs echo from within.

Entering the Crusty Mug

The scent of roasted meat, smoke, and ale hits you as you step into the Crusty Mug's busy main floor. Wooden tables fill the space beneath low-hung beams, while patrons shout across the room or huddle in conversation. A staircase rises to your left, and a wide bar runs along the back wall, lined with busy barkeeps.

Going to the Second Floor

As you climb the stairs and hand over your silver to the dragonborn doorman, the mood changes almost instantly. The rough tavern roar fades beneath you, replaced by a softer hum of clinking glasses, low music, and calm conversation. The air is cleaner here—scented faintly with citrus and pipe smoke.

The decor shifts from worn wood to polished floors and decorative lanterns that cast warm pools of color across the room. Rich drapes line the windows, and the tables are round, sturdy, and neatly spaced, each with padded chairs or cushioned benches. A smaller bar gleams in the back corner, tended by a sharply dressed bartender who nods as you arrive.

While less chaotic than the main floor, there's still a lively energy—just with better manners and higher coin.

Entering the Gambler’s Den

Hidden beneath the main staircase, the entry to the cellar is discreet—just a small wooden door. It opens to reveal a narrow stairway descending into flickering lamplight and plush air.

At the bottom, the space opens into a wide, luxurious room that feels worlds away from the raucous tavern above. Thick red carpets muffle your steps, and the scent of expensive liquor and scented wax fills the room. Circular tables of polished oak are arranged for cards, dice, and other games of chance—each one with comfortable leather seating and low golden lamps overhead. Velvet curtains hang along the walls, and a single dartboard and roulette table occupy the corners.

Docks

The Docks are a sprawling network of wharfs, ship berths, and warehouses along the waterfront, where fishmongers, sailors, merchants, and dockhands keep business flowing from dawn till dusk. The area is divided into two major sections: the Dockyards, where small fishing boats and personal vessels are moored, and the Grand Pier, an elevated, broad wooden platform lined with shops, storage houses, and vendor stalls. This area handles much of the import/export traffic for the city, and it’s not uncommon for ships from distant lands to be anchored just offshore. Dockmaster Burg Stugmire, a gruff but savvy human with years of experience, manages the docks with an iron clipboard and a reputation for knowing every crate and coin that passes through. Smuggling, theft, and shady dealings occur beneath the surface, often out of sight—but never truly out of mind.

The Docks of Emberstran make up a large, vital portion of the city’s Port District, stretching along the southern edge where the Glimmering Sea laps against the stone and timber piers. At the heart of the docks lies the Grand Pier, bustling with activity—shops, seafood stands, and strange wares from across the sea. Barrels, crates, and bundled nets line the piers, while broad-shouldered dockhands move with practiced ease. Beyond it, great ships bob gently in the harbor, their sails furled and flags snapping in the breeze.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Burg Stugmire	dockmaster (commoner)	male human Gruff, no-nonsense man in his fifties with a thick brow and an ever-present pipe. Knows the docks better than anyone and hates mysteries at sea.
Darn Iglehem	dockhand (commoner)	male human Short blond hair, dark eyes, athletic, light-hearted; often fishes off the docks.

Dyed Cane

The Dyed Cane is one of the more upscale pubs in Emberstran. While the exterior is modest—made of Emberstran’s typical grey stone with nothing more than a weathered sign reading Pub—it is well-known among locals and travelers as a refined, cozy establishment with a loyal following. The pub takes its name from barken-tea, a local delicacy harvested from a particular type of Baltwood trees. When steeped, the curled cane-like bark dyes liquid a deep purple and offers a rich, earthy flavor with hints of berry and smoke.

Inside, the Dyed Cane is warm and inviting, with low golden lighting, thick wooden beams, and polished stone floors softened by woven rugs. Bordi, the owner and barkeep, is a cheerful but firm man with a round face and an impressive mustache. He runs the pub efficiently with help from a small team of attractive and charismatic servers, Lella and Bells. They are known for their discretion, banter, and ability to remember customer preferences. Patrons are greeted with a cheese plate and warm bread basket with every drink order. A well-stocked bar serves fine wines, house ales, seasonal teas, and the occasional high-end liquor. Upstairs, two private rooms are available for rent (5 gp per visit) and are often used for confidential meetings. Food is prepared by Treg.

Near Emberstran’s western gate, a modest stone building sits between a candle shop and a tailor’s storefront. The only sign above the door simply reads: Pub. But the scent that drifts from inside—fresh bread, spiced tea, and toasted cheese—suggests something more refined awaits within.

Upon Entering ...

You step into a warm, softly lit room where golden light glows off dark wood and polished stone. The air is rich with the scent of barken-tea, baked bread, and aged cheese. Gentle laughter and clinking glass mingle beneath the low hum of conversation. A round-faced man with a magnificent mustache pours drinks behind a long bar, nodding at your arrival as a tray of bread and cheese passes by in the hands of a smiling server.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Bordi	barkeep (commoner)	male human Portly with a mustache. Friendly, practical, and a reliable local figure. Straightforward and talkative, with connections across town. Acts as an information broker in a subtle way, often through casual conversation.
Treg Reynuk	cook (commoner)	male half-orc Tall and broad-shouldered with short hair. Takes more pride in helping Bordi make the tea and special blend than preparing food.

NPC	Role	Description
“Lella” Veld	server (commoner)	female human Curvy woman with brown curls and an embracing smile, Lella is known for making the patrons feel welcome.
“Bells” Shanra	server (commoner)	female tiefling With deep violet skin and golden eyes, Bells is charming, flirtatious, and hard to forget. She’s especially popular with Emberstran’s traveling merchants.

Gems of Emberstran

Gems of Emberstran is a respected and meticulously run jeweler’s shop located just off the market square near Emberstran’s docks. The shop is famed for the quality and artistry of its work—especially jewelry crafted using gems mined from the dwarven city of Dunduar.

The shop is owned, operated and home to Bafast UMBERFIST and his assistant Emiffi Wimplerag. His craftsmanship is equal to that of the dwarves of Dunduar when it comes to faceting rare gems and embedding them into jewelry. Emiffi is often missed by newcomers, but Bafast treats her like a master-in-training and consults her frequently for color pairing and aesthetic layout.

They keep the shop clean and well-lit, with warm lanterns reflecting off velvet-backed display cases. Behind the counter, Bafast works at his gem bench between customers, often inviting returning patrons to watch him work. While high-end pieces are stored in a reinforced backroom, the shop keeps several ready-to-sell rings, necklaces, brooches, and cufflinks on display.

Approaching the shop ...

Beside the market square by the docks, the storefront is unassuming save for the finely carved wooden sign above the door: “Gems of Emberstran”, with a polished red garnet set into the final letter. A faint glitter of lanternlight can be seen through the windows.

Upon entering ...

The air inside is warm and clean, with a slight tang of metal and mineral. Polished display cases line the walls, each showcasing glittering jewelry set into velvet stands—rings, pendants, brooches, and more. The lighting is well positioned to catch every sparkle. Behind the counter, a burly dwarf in a smock hunches over a gem-cutting wheel, nodding at your arrival without missing a beat. A small figure—partially hidden by a shelf of tools—glances your way and quickly looks back down.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Bafast Umberfist	owner / jeweler (commoner)	male dwarf Broad, focused, and direct, Bafast wears thick goggles and speaks with the gravel of someone who’s inhaled more dust than sea air. He prides himself on flawless workmanship and traditional techniques.
Emiffi Wimplerag	assistant (commoner)	female deep gnome Petite and soft-spoken, Emiffi has large violet eyes and wears a tool apron three sizes too big. She is easily overlooked but incredibly precise, with a gifted eye for symmetry and color balance.

The following unique items or services can be found here:

Item	Description	Cost
Discreet Gem Transfer	For trusted clients, Bafast offers a discreet service that hides messages or tokens inside hollowed stones or enchanted faceted gems. Often used for smuggling or secrets.	5 gp
Gem Appraisal Service	Bafast offers formal appraisals of raw or set gems. Certificates are signed with his seal and accepted across most of the realm.	1 gp

Headless Hydra

The Headless Hydra is the largest and most popular inn in Emberstran, located in the Southwest District at the end of the main road leading from the city’s western gate. A landmark for travelers and caravan teams alike, the inn is known for its reliability, cleanliness, and the warm familiarity of its seasoned staff. Its prominent placement makes it the first stop for many newcomers entering the city and a familiar comfort to locals on their way home.

The establishment operates with practiced efficiency. Guests are welcomed by a quick-talking hostess, directed to the bar or rooms by friendly staff, and served hearty fare from a busy kitchen run by a husband-wife duo. The dining area includes a stone-topped bar and ten sturdy tables with polished wood benches. Lodging is spread across two floors above, with rooms that range from shared bunks to private suites. The inn rarely has an empty room, and advance booking is common during festivals or trade surges.

At the westernmost edge of Emberstran’s bustling Southwest District, a broad stone-and-timber building stands proudly at the end of the road, its weathered sign depicting a snarling, many-necked hydra with one head missing. Warm light spills from its tall front windows, and the sound of laughter and clinking tankards reaches the street.

Upon entering ...

The scent of roasted meat and spiced cider fills the air as you enter a wide, fire-lit room with low wooden beams and a long bar of polished stone. A dozen or so patrons crowd the tables or lean against the bar, while servers weave expertly through the room balancing trays and mugs. A staircase along the back wall leads to upper lodging quarters.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Laena	hostess (commoner)	female human Wears a dark red blouse with laced sleeves and a slate-gray apron; her curly brown hair is pinned back with brass clips. Brisk, observant, and witty, Laena keeps the front of house moving with a practiced smile and a sharp eye for trouble.
Jasline	barmaid (commoner)	female half-elf Slender with golden hair in a braid, wearing a green dress with a patchwork apron and a vine tattoo that wraps her forearm. Chatty, friendly, and secretly nosy, Jasline remembers regulars and often overhears useful gossip.
Devron	owner (commoner)	male dwarf Stocky and bald with a thick black beard split into two braids, he wears a sleeveless leather vest and carries a ring of keys on his belt. Gruff but fair, Devron manages the tavern floor and bar with a strict eye for order and a deep love of well-aged ale.

NPC	Role	Description
Djorn	cook (commoner)	male human Broad-shouldered with a scarred forearm, short gray-streaked hair, and a flour-dusted tunic under a thick apron. Proud of his kitchen, Djorn is focused and serious when cooking, but cracks dry jokes when the rush slows.
Maecy	housekeeper (commoner)	female human Modest in dress, with a weathered but elegant face framed by silver-streaked dark hair tied in a low bun. Patient, wise, and quietly commanding, Maecy manages the inn's lodging, bookings, and guest issues.

Description of the Rooms

The narrow wooden door opens into a cozy room with a low ceiling and thick-beamed walls. A single bed with a wool-stuffed mattress sits against the far wall, neatly made with a faded patchwork quilt. A small round table and a wooden chair stand near the window, where a shutter can be latched from the inside. A simple iron hook on the wall holds a traveler's cloak, and a ceramic basin rests on a washstand beside a small mirror cracked at one corner. A faint scent of lavender lingers in the air from the freshly laid reed sachet tucked beneath the bedframe.

Imonorra's Tower

Imonorra Asuun, the Lord's Advisor, resides in a tall, four-story tower on the northeastern edge of Emberstran. Her tower mirrors the Lord's Keep in construction—grey stone walls with black iron accents—but is notably more secluded, surrounded by a dense collection of aged trees and cultivated greenery that give the grounds an arcane serenity. The base of the tower includes a circular receiving chamber with a warded door, leading to spiral stairs that ascend to her study, library, observatory, and private quarters. Magical wards protect the structure, and it's rumored the upper floors can shift or seal at Imonorra's will. Several magical lanterns glow faintly among the trees, and hidden glyphs line the perimeter, providing subtle protection.

Imonorra rarely descends into Emberstran, and entrance to the tower is by invitation only. It is protected by numerous magical wards, including displacement sigils, fire runes, and illusionary defenses. The wizard is assisted by her young elven apprentice, Dathriel Runewish, and accompanied by her longtime familiar, Brunna, a sentient emberling fire elemental. Both maintain the tower's operation and help manage Imonorra's research, which spans subjects ranging from planar resonance to elemental channeling.

As you reach the northeastern edge of Emberstran, you spot a towering grey structure rising through a thick patch of trees. Imonorra's tower, tall and slender with four distinct levels, looks much like the Lord's Keep—dark stone and black iron detail—but its atmosphere is quieter, almost enchanted. The path to the arched entrance winds beneath lantern-lit boughs and old trees whose leaves cast moving shadows along the ground. The ironwork around the high windows twists into arcane shapes.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Imonorra	owner	female human Imonorra is cryptic and exacting, speaking in riddles and expecting excellence from those around her. Slender and elderly, with long silver hair in a braided bun, sharp violet eyes, and arcane-stitched robes that shimmer faintly under torchlight.
Dathriel Runewish	assistant (commoner)	male elf Curious, earnest, and occasionally flustered, Dathriel tries to prove himself worthy of Imonorra’s instruction. Young adult elf with ash-blond hair, bronze-toned skin, and an emerald robe a size too large, often smudged with chalk and ink.
Brunna	familiar	fire emberling Sassy and impulsive, Brunna delights in mischief and minor explosions but is fiercely loyal to Imonorra. A one-foot-tall humanoid figure of glowing embers and living flame, with a constantly flickering outline and crackling voice.

Main Floor (Ground Level): Entrance Hall & Dining Area

Reception and formal interaction zone for invited guests.

Visitors enter through a thick iron-bound arcanelly-sealed door into a circular hall with polished basalt floors inlaid with silvery runes. A trio of arcane braziers cast light upward, illuminating hanging scrolls that shimmer with magical notation. The far side opens into a dining chamber with a round obsidian table that levitates inches above the floor, set with mismatched but ornate high-backed chairs. Meals are conjured by an unseen servant and served with impeccable timing.

A hallway to the left leads to guest accommodations, including a private guest suite.

Guest Quarters (Main Floor East Wing)

Secure, private lodging for trusted dignitaries or controversial allies.

The suite is warded against scrying and detection, featuring enchanted silks draped over curved windows and a sunken sitting area with plush crimson cushions. A dressing mirror enchanted with glamor magic stands in the corner, and a disguised teleportation circle is hidden beneath the carpet.

The bed is large, canopied, and lined with ebon velvet. A decanter of endless wine and an animated quill on a writing desk serve a guest’s leisure needs.

Second Floor – Library and Study

Central knowledge archive and workspace for magical research.

Wall-to-wall shelves made of gleaming duskwood hold scrolls, rare tomes, and bound grimoires. A whispering ward hushes voices unless spoken into designated arcane circles embedded in the floor. There are reading alcoves with floating lanterns and a central scribing table surrounded by chalkboards that erase and rewrite themselves under command.

Dathriel is often found here, taking notes or dozing over half-translated planar treatises.

Third Floor – Laboratory and Binding Circle

Arcane experimentation, potion crafting, and planar studies.

This room houses an eight-foot-wide sigil circle etched into obsidian stone, used for summoning, binding, or observation. Three containment columns with stasis fields flank the western side. An alchemy bench lines the curved outer wall, stocked with rare reagents and fuming vials.

Arcane wards prevent explosions from damaging the rest of the tower. Brunna frequently tends the small heat forge embedded into the floor. A balcony juts out over the eastern side of Emberstran, with an adjustable brass telescope pointed toward the Glimmering Sea.

Fourth Floor – Observatory & Astral Lantern Chamber

Plane-monitoring observatory and personal chamber for Imonorra.

A domed room with a partially transparent ceiling, enchanted to reveal the moons Endelo’ar and Tudara and astral phenomena invisible to the naked eye. In the center, the Astral Lantern pulses with slow, deliberate light, casting long shadows over the crystal-inlaid floor. Charts of star alignments and planar crossings line scroll racks along the walls.

A single bed and modest desk are tucked into a corner, though Imonorra often sleeps at her desk or not at all.

Lady Luck’s Temple

Lady Luck’s Temple is a vibrant and welcoming place of worship devoted to Osanna, goddess of fortune, revelry, and risk. Located in the southwestern quarter of Emberstran, where most of the city’s common folk live and work, the temple stands as a cheerful sanctuary amid the bustle.

The building is painted in bright hues—lavenders, golds, and ocean greens—though weathered by salt and sun. Pennants hang from the eaves, and small chimes tinkle in the breeze. The front door is rarely closed, and laughter and music can often be heard inside, especially in the evenings.

Inside, the temple is less solemn than sacred spaces devoted to other gods. There are no pews—only cushions, cube-shaped stools, and round tables for communal games or open readings. A central dais displays Osanna’s symbol.

Under the guidance of priestess Terelda, the temple runs games of chance, festivals, and blessings for those about to take important risks—whether in love, business, or battle. Small golden colored bowls are scattered about the temple for donations. Services are casual but heartfelt.

Approaching the temple ...

Bright flags and painted doors greet you as you approach a cheery-looking temple tucked among the winding lanes of Emberstran’s southwest quarter. The scent of incense wafts from within, and the jangle of coins can be heard. A painted sign reads: Lady Luck’s Temple – Fortune Smiles on the Bold.

Upon Entering ...

Inside, the temple feels more like a festival hall than a place of worship. Cushions and cube-shaped stools are scattered around polished wooden floors. Incense burns in a golden dish and coins glitter in small offering bowls on every table. At the far end, a halfling woman in a deep violet robe and sparkling bangles nods at you in greeting.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description
Terelda Cinderbell	priestess (priest)	female halfling Cheerful and quick-witted, Terelda wears colorful robes, jangling bracelets, and always seems to be laughing or storytelling. She believes fortune favors the brave—and keeps a lucky coin at all times.
Kedder Rynn	acolyte (priest acolyte)	male human A tall thick man with thick salt and pepper hair and beard. Kedder oversees casual games and fortune-tosses, claiming the goddess whispers to him when stakes are high.
Eva Stel’danna	acolyte (priest acolyte)	female half-elf An attractive, olive skinned woman with cloud-white curls that appear out of place on her youthful face. Eva is warm and welcoming, often recounting stories she’s heard from visitors.

Spell Services

At the DM’s discretion, there may be spell services available as outlined in the Myrdae Reference for DMs.

Lord’s Keep

Lord Dusklight’s residence, known as the Lord’s Keep, is the political and symbolic heart of Emberstran’s power. Perched on the highest elevation of the northern district, this four-story estate is built from solid grey stone and features four square towers—one at each corner—accented with black ironwork railings, window casings, and archways that give the structure a subtly gothic presence. The rear of the keep commands a panoramic view of the piers and docks far below, thanks to the sheer cliff it sits atop, allowing the lord a literal and figurative vantage point over his city. Within the estate, council meetings are held in a grand chamber on the third floor, while the uppermost floor serves as Lord Dusklight’s private quarters. The estate also includes servants’ quarters, a well-stocked larder, and rooms for honored guests. Guards are always stationed at the front and rear entrances, and only those with formal invitations or business of significance are granted entry beyond the courtyard gates.

The cobbled road that leads you to the Lord’s Keep ends in a large circular driveway that curves around an ornate fountain. Rising behind it is the Lord’s Keep—a grand four-story stone estate with imposing square towers and dark iron fixtures. Though its sharp edged stonework lend it a brooding silhouette, the grounds are softened by several large hardwood trees that cast patterned shadows across the gravel paths. The Keep overlooks the docks far below, the distant sound of gulls and crashing waves faint on the wind. The high walls of the northern district and the sharp cliffs behind the estate ensure that this stronghold is as defensible as it is commanding.

Market

Known simply as “The Market,” this open-air trading hub sits in the heart of Emberstran’s bustling dock district, where sailors, merchants, and locals mingle in a shifting maze of stalls and wagons. The market runs daily, with its busiest hours in the late morning after ships unload their cargo. Vendors come from across the city and beyond, offering goods that range from everyday necessities to rare curiosities brought in on foreign ships. The stalls change from day to day, but several long-standing merchants maintain prime positions year-round.

The dockside street opens into a wide area teeming with people. Bright awnings and banners flap in the breeze as the calls of vendors compete with the chatter of customers.

As you enter the market, you weave into a mix of stalls and tables, each piled high with goods—crates of food, rolls of dyed cloth, baskets of fish. Vendors call out their wares, trying to catch your eye or your coin.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Role	Description

Gabbie Gluster	baked goods (commoner)	female human Plump and cheerful, with flour dusting her hair. Offers warm loaves, honey rolls, and flaky meat pies, drawing a steady stream of hungry sailors.

Old Oak & Grapes

The Old Oak & Grapes is Emberstran’s most refined and artistic tavern, located prominently in the Northern District. Known for its interactive performances, especially murder mystery plays, the pub attracts a wealthier, cultured clientele who enjoy their meals with a side of drama. The establishment is owned by Otith Hunkel, a charming and well-kept middle-aged human man who mingles with patrons with ease.

The performances are coordinated by Meglyn Whistlebell, an elderly gnome with a sharp tongue and impeccable timing. Her stories range from farce to intrigue, and the murder mystery plays have become the tavern's signature draw.

The tavern includes:

- A small stage at the far end used for performances.
- A central floor space with round tables and candlelit booths.
- A long polished bar to the right upon entry, usually manned by Otith or the barmaids.
- Pem and Ledra, two attractive human women in their early twenties, are the primary servers and known for their flirtatious banter and stylish attire.
- The décor is elegant but cozy: dark mahogany furniture, vine-motif carvings, velvet curtains in grape and gold hues, and a large oak beam overhead carved with theatrical masks.

On performance nights, a subtle bell chime marks the beginning, and audience participation is often encouraged. The stage and the pub floor blur together, enhancing immersion.

As you step into the Old Oak & Grapes, you're greeted by warmth, music, and the low hum of conversation. Candlelight flickers across polished wooden tables, plush booths, and grape-colored curtains that hang around the stage at the far end. A carved oak beam arches overhead, its surface inlaid with theatrical masks and curling vine patterns.

To your right, a long wooden bar gleams beneath warm lanterns, tended by a smiling, silver-tongued man and two striking barmaids who weave effortlessly between patrons.

Points & Edges

Points and Edges is a well-respected blacksmith shop situated near the bustling docks of Emberstran. Though modest in size, it has earned a strong reputation among sailors, mercenaries, and city guards for the quality of its weaponry and reliable craftsmanship in armor. The forge produces finely balanced swords, daggers, spears, and crossbows, along with sturdy chainmail and reinforced leather armor. Due to its proximity to the docks, many travelers and hired blades passing through Emberstran frequent Points and Edges before setting off on voyages or contracts. The owner is known for straightforward dealings, a discerning eye for steel, and a quiet pride in quality over ornamentation.

Description for Players Approaching

The steady ring of hammer upon anvil echoes above the din of dockworkers and gulls. Nestled just off a narrow cobbled street near the water’s edge, Points and Edges displays its wares beneath a wide wooden awning. Blades glint beneath the morning sun, while racks of spears, maces, and polished shields stand neatly arranged for inspection. The scent of burning coal and oiled leather lingers in the air.

Description for Players Entering

Inside, the forge radiates heat as the smiths work metal over glowing coals. Racks along the stone walls display finished weapons: longswords, sabers, warhammers, and rows of daggers, each meticulously balanced. The floor bears the dark stains of long hours at work, and a heavy oak counter stands at the front for transactions. A smaller side room holds armor pieces — chainmail, reinforced leathers, and bucklers hanging on sturdy iron hooks. The rhythmic clang of steel-on-steel carries from the rear where apprentices shape raw metal into its final form.

NPC	Role	Description
Marcen Vaelrick	smith (commoner)	male human Broad-shouldered, bald with a dark beard streaked in silver, usually wears a soot-stained leather apron. Reserved and focused, speaks plainly but is respected for his fairness and skill.
Yorel Orebender	smith (commoner)	male dwarf Short, stocky, with braided auburn beard, wears thick forge gloves at all times. Gruff but humorous, expert in blade balance and forging exotic weapon types.
Tassa Winmere	smith (commoner)	female half-elf Slender, dark-haired with keen grey eyes, often dressed in clean but practical work clothes with a ledger in hand. Sharp-witted, handles most customer dealings and transactions.

Services Provided

The smith provides services for buying, selling and repairing armor and weapons.

Raddic’s Rarities

Located prominently on the docks of Emberstran’s bustling pier, Raddic’s Rarities is one of the largest and most well-known specialty shops in the city. The structure features a wide, circular storefront made of weathered stone and rich timber, attached to an elongated warehouse space. The circular room acts as the primary display area, offering a curated selection of rare finds, unique curiosities, enchanted odds and ends, and items brought in from distant lands via ship. Behind it, the warehouse stores more mundane goods and crates waiting to be sorted or sold to discerning buyers.

The shop is operated by Raddic Haldir, a savvy and sharply dressed half-elven merchant with an eye for value and a knack for spinning tales about the items he sells. His half-orc shop guard, Irog, patrols the open interior of the shop to keep thieves and troublemakers at bay. Irog’s towering presence is often enough to prevent any incidents.

While general goods are available, it's the shelves and cases of unusual trinkets, ancient maps, minor magical items, and bizarre tools that make the shop stand out. Raddic has connections with sea captains, mercenaries, and adventurers, and is always looking to buy or sell something new—no matter how obscure.

Raddic’s Rarities has a circular stone storefront with colorful banners that catches your eye. The sign above the open double doors reads “Raddic’s Rarities”, painted in flowing gold script. Inside, the shop is spacious and unusually open, with wide shelves and glass cases showcasing all manner of strange and rare items: intricately carved idols, exotic spices, shimmering fabrics, old coins and dusty tomes. To the side, an open arch leads to a long warehouse filled with crates and bundled goods.

A large half-orc with a polished glaive eyes customers as he patrols slowly through the shop, while behind the front counter, a sharply dressed half-elf adjusts a ledger and greets you. “Looking for something you didn’t know you needed?” he says. “You’ve come to the right place.”

Silver Spaulder

The Silver Spaulder is an upscale armory located on the edge of Emberstran’s docks. Under the new ownership of Vyaanis Aeldorien, a master smith drow seeking a fresh start on the surface, the shop has quickly gained a reputation for the finest armor craftsmanship in Emberstran.

Vyaanis’ arrival in the city was not by chance—he was persuaded to move here by his old friend, Bafast Umberfist, the renowned jeweler who owns Gems of Emberstran. That connection has brought a certain shared clientele between the two shops, often leading to armor commissions inlaid with precious metals or gemwork for noble patrons and ceremonial guards.

The armory is meticulously kept. Gleaming breastplates, ornate pauldrons, and fitted chain hang in neat rows, while glass-front cases display specially commissioned works. Vyaanis is assisted by two skilled male deep gnomes, Nebist and Lombit Wimplerag—brothers with an uncanny ability to fit armor precisely to a wearer’s build. They handle much of the finishing work and customer fittings, while Vyaanis focuses on design, metalwork, and specialized orders.

Approaching ...

The shopfront is understated but immaculate—a wide set of glass-paned windows revealing a pristine interior where suits of armor gleam in the lamplight. Above the door hangs a polished steel pauldron, its surface etched with curling silver filigree.

Entering ...

Inside, the air is warm with the scent of oiled steel and faintly sweet forge smoke. Armor stands line the walls, displaying everything from gleaming plate to finely linked mail. A large counter sits toward the back, behind which a dark-skinned elf in a crisp leather apron works his latest piece. Two muscular deep gnomes move about deliberately.

Temple to Diverra

Located in the refined northern district of Emberstran, the Temple of Diverra is a mid-sized sanctuary devoted to the goddess of love and passion. The temple is constructed of smooth, pale stone with rich, dark red wood trimming and accents of gilded metal.

The main chamber is a square, vaulted room with polished wooden pews arranged in gentle arcs around a gilded altar. Tall candelabras and natural light from arched windows illuminate the space with a golden glow. To the left of the altar room are living quarters and meditation spaces for the clergy. The rooms to the right are used for private counsel, where worshippers speak with the temple’s clerics.

The temple is overseen by High Priestess Maladra Sent, a half-elf known both for her captivating presence and her heartfelt devotion to Diverra’s teachings. Her acolytes are often trained here before leaving to found or support temples in other towns. Several assistants maintain the temple’s immaculate condition and assist with ceremonies and rituals.

The Temple of Diverra stands out with its graceful design. Its pale stone exterior, trimmed with deep red woods and shining metal hint at the passion and beauty the goddess represents. Inside, soft candlelight and sunbeams fall across polished pews and a golden altar.

Warm Bear Inn

Located near the southeastern gates of Emberstran, the Warm Bear Inn is a well-known lodge-style inn that caters primarily to hunters, trappers, and adventurers passing through or returning from the wilds. The exterior is solid and sturdy, made from heavy timber and stone, with a carved wooden sign bearing the image of a bear next to a crackling fire.

The inn is divided into two distinct sections:

- The Inn – The left side of the building houses the guest rooms, which span three floors and are simple but clean, with thick quilts, carved bed frames, and plenty of hooks for hanging gear.
- The Tavern – The right side features the tavern, a large vaulted space that opens high above the common room with exposed rafters and a massive hearth that rarely goes out. The walls are covered in mounted beasts—antlered stags, wolves, boars and small game donated by loyal patrons.

The inn is run by Gustav Beargrin, a gruff but fair former hunter who retired after a mauling left him with a limp and a deep appreciation for warm fires. Hunting parties often gather here to share stories, barter for supplies, or post notices for companions.

When Approaching ...

Just off the southeastern road, thick timber beams and a broad stone chimney mark a sturdy inn beneath a carved wooden sign of a bear curled beside a fire. The scent of roasting meat and pipe smoke drifts through the cool air, and the faint glow of lanterns flickers behind hunting-shuttered windows.

Upon Entering ...

The air inside is warm and rich with the smell of meat, pinewood, and old smoke. To your right, a towering hearth crackles beneath a vaulted ceiling, its beams hung with pelts and proud antlers. Heads of beasts stare from the walls.

Hunters huddle at thick tables, boots muddy and mugs full. To your left, a hallway leads toward a quieter area of guest rooms.
