Overview

Nunglthil is an Underdark trading enclave on the black shores of Rothenloch that has endured for more than a century by maintaining a strictly enforced neutrality. It is the single most reliable crossing point between surface merchants and Underdark cultures, a place where trade, information, and influence flow as freely as coin — but only because its five enclaves uphold an unspoken pact: violence threatens everyone’s livelihood. Beneath this uneasy peace lies a constant hum of politics, secrets, and mutual suspicion. Each enclave manipulates trade, territory, and reputation to secure subtle advantages while never quite risking open conflict.

Nunglthil is a balanced ecosystem, not a lawful sanctuary. Every faction here has goals, grudges, and vulnerabilities, and the trading post thrives because no one power can afford to dominate the others. The surface enclave Kar’Solar is quietly influenced by thieves’ guilds; Gral’thune stewards the physical stability of the settlement; Selraeth’s drow maintain intricate social webs; Durrak’s duergar operate under strict hierarchies of labor, security, and profit; and Glimmerdel’s svirfneblin remain the quietest but most observant power. This balance introduces intrigue, shifting alliances, and morally gray negotiations without breaking the essential premise: Nunglthil survives because everyone needs it.

Nunglthil is a rare sanctuary deep in the Underdark — a crescent of wooden docks and lantern-lit caverns along the still waters of Rothenloch, where surface travelers and Underdark peoples can trade without fear of being attacked. Though each part of the settlement belongs to one of five distinct enclaves, all who enter agree to the same rule:

keep the peace, or be cast out. The result is a bustling, strange, and vibrant crossroads of cultures, where merchants, scouts, cooks, scholars, hunters, and artisans mingle under the glow of bioluminescent fungus and flickering lanterns.

While the settlement can be safe enough for travelers, Nunglthil is far from simple. Every enclave keeps to its traditions — the Selraeth drow maintain elegant but watchful halls, the duergar run industrious forges, the svirfneblin trade delicate wonders, and the ulbin and dwarves of Gral'thune tend the sturdy structures that keep the whole place from collapsing. Visitors are welcomed so long as they show respect, mind local customs, and honor the no-violence pact. For those willing to navigate its blend of shadows and diplomacy, Nunglthil offers rare goods, unexpected allies, and secrets whispered from both the deepest tunnels and the world above.

History

Nunglthil began not as a market, but as a refuge. During the height of the Demon Wars, when incursions from the deep places of the Underdark shattered settlements and turned long-held tunnels into killing grounds, disparate peoples fled toward the shores of Rothenloch. Ulbin, duergar, svirfneblin, and drow found themselves pressed into the same cavern with no safe route forward or back. From necessity rather than trust, they forged what became known as the Refuge Pact—an agreement to suspend rivalries, share defenses, and hold the cavern together against the demonic threat.

As the wars deepened, the cavern at Rothenloch proved uniquely defensible. Its sheer cliffs, controllable dock access, and the river that carried supplies deeper into the Underdark allowed Nunglthil to evolve into a joint stronghold. Fortifications were carved into the stone, watch posts established along the lake and tunnels, and mixed patrols coordinated resistance against demon incursions. When the demonic advance was finally broken, the fort was no longer needed—but the bonds forged in survival endured. In the years that followed, Nunglthil shed its martial purpose and transformed into a neutral trading hub, with surface traders joining. They preserved the spirit of the Refuge Pact as a vow of peace.

Citizenry

Nunglthil is home to a rare and uneasy mix of peoples drawn from both the Underdark and the surface world. Its population is divided among five pact-bound enclaves—Gral'thune, Selraeth, Kar'Solar, Durrak, and Glimmerdel—each maintaining its own customs, internal authority, and traditions. Ulbin, dwarves, drow, duergar, svirfneblin, and surface folk live in close proximity, bound not by shared culture but by mutual reliance. Though tensions and old prejudices persist, open violence is rare, as the survival of the settlement depends on restraint and cooperation.

The people of Nunglthil tend to be pragmatic, guarded, and keenly aware of reputation. Favor—one's standing within an enclave or with respected traders—matters more than wealth alone and shapes social interactions, trade opportunities, and access to information. Long-time residents are accustomed to seeing strangers and outsiders pass through, and while initial suspicion is common, those who prove reliable often find acceptance. Citizens value stability above all else; having survived war, demonic incursions, and the collapse of other Underdark settlements, the people of Nunglthil understand that peace here is not idealistic—it is necessary.

Gral'thune – “The Strongback”

Made up almost exclusively of ulbin and dwarves, Gral'thune is the backbone of Nunglthil. They hold the pact of peace most sacred, and violations are handled with firm, unyielding justice. They are slow to anger, but once angered, equally slow to forgive. The enclaves usually say, “If Gral'thune ever fell, Nunglthil would collapse within a week.”

Selraeth – “The Silken Dominion”

Selraeth is a drow enclave that balances poise with tension. Unlike the more ruthless cities of their people, Selraeth was founded by drow houses who believed that controlled diplomacy and trade would strengthen their influence far more than mindless violence. Though less openly treacherous than their kin, Selraeth is still a place of shifting alliances and poised daggers, where their presence ensures that Nunglthil is always in an undercurrent of political tension.

Kar'Solar – “The Sunbearers”

Widely viewed as a den of thieves, Kar'Solar is the enclave formed by surface dwellers who descended into Nunglthil generations ago to establish permanent trade routes into the Underdark. Despite the reputation, Kar'Solar has strict internal codes: no murder within the enclave, no theft from Nunglthil's neutral zones, and no endangering trade. Breaking these rules results in swift, quiet retribution. Over the decades, it has become a tangled collection of: thieves' guild offshoots, smugglers, itinerant merchants, fortune-seekers and guildless wanderers.

Durrak – “The Ironbound”

Duerger established Durrak to ensure they would have controlled access to surface goods while avoiding exploitation by other races. Duerger merchants are famously humorless but unfailingly direct. They value the trading pact because it extracts wealth from their neighbors, not because they seek harmony. However, despite their pragmatism, they honor bargains — and betrayal is punished without hesitation.

Glimmerdel – “The Glow Borough”

Glimmerdel is probably the most approachable enclave, made up of svirfneblin that bring an uncommon sense of cheer and optimism to Nungylthil. Though often underestimated, Glimmerdel has a tight communal network and fiercely guards Nungylthil’s neutrality. They are the first to sense danger and the fastest to coordinate warnings.

Traditions

Tokens of Safe Return

Before undertaking dangerous journeys, residents and travelers of Nunglthil often leave behind a personal token—such as a trinket, charm, or written note—with a trusted innkeeper, enclave representative, or at the Dais of Devotion. If the bearer does return, the token is reclaimed and often worn or displayed as a sign of survival. If they do not, the token is offered at the Dais or passed to kin, ensuring the traveler is remembered even if they are lost to the depths.

The Open Feast

On the first day of every harmon, the docks and harbor platforms of Nunglthil are given over to the Open Feast, a communal gathering where food and drink are shared openly. Long tables are set along the water’s edge, braziers are lit, and the people exchange meals, stories, and tales. Old rivalries are expected to rest for the evening. The people believe that survival is easier when stories, warnings, and successes are shared.

Government

Nunglthil is governed by the Pact Council, a cooperative body formed from the five enclaves that comprise the settlement. Each enclave appoints a single representative—known informally as a Pact Voice—to speak and act on its behalf. The Council exists solely to oversee matters that affect the settlement as a whole, including the enforcement of neutrality, regulation of shared trade spaces, control of harbor access, and the defense of Nunglthil against external threats. Internal laws, customs, and discipline remain the exclusive domain of each enclave, preserving their autonomy while binding them to the common pact.

Decisions of the Pact Council are reached through consensus whenever possible. Minor matters require agreement from a majority of the enclaves, while major actions—such as altering the terms of neutrality, expelling an enclave, or mobilizing settlement-wide defenses—require unanimous consent. Enforcement is delegated rather than centralized:

- ◆ Durrak enforces contracts and penalties,
- ◆ Glimmerdel coordinates warnings and route surveillance,
- ◆ Gral’tune oversees physical defenses and peacekeeping,
- ◆ Kar’Solar maintains surface relations and logistics, and
- ◆ Selraeth manages intelligence and mediation.

Alongside formal governance, Favor functions as a powerful informal authority; reputation and recognized service often determine access, influence, and trust more effectively than written decree. This balance of shared rule and mutual restraint has allowed Nunglthil to endure where more rigid powers have failed.

Pact Council

Enclave	Name	Description
Durrak	Odik Grumwall	male, duergar
Glimmerdel	Antadda Coppereyes	female, svirfneblin
Gral’Thune	Kaduu Settibel	female, ulbin
Kar’Solar	Vansia Kelmoor	male, human
Selraeth	Zeyona Jandori	female, drow

Laws

Law in Nunglthil is founded on the Pact of Neutrality, a simple but absolute principle: violence and actions that threaten trade or stability are forbidden in shared spaces. Each enclave enforces its own internal laws, but crimes committed in neutral zones—docks, markets, the Dais of Devotion, and major thoroughfares—fall under the authority of the Pact Council. There is no unified legal code; instead, judgments are guided by precedent, enclave customs, and the practical need to preserve order and commerce.

Punishment in Nunglthil favors restitution and consequence over execution. Common penalties include fines paid in coin or labor, seizure of goods, temporary restriction from trade, or the loss of Favor. Severe or repeated offenses may result in public stripping of an enclave’s favor badge, enforced exile from Nunglthil, or, in rare cases, permanent banishment under escort. Violence within sacred or neutral spaces—especially the Dais of Devotion—is considered one of the gravest crimes and may provoke a unified enclave response. Justice in Nunglthil is swift, pragmatic, and rarely merciful, driven by the understanding that survival in the Underdark depends on order far more than forgiveness.

Punishment

Punishment for crimes in Nunglthil may include one or more of the following, determined by severity, location, intent, prior offenses, and enclave involvement:

- ◆ Loss of Favor (temporary or permanent, enclave-specific or settlement-wide)
- ◆ Restitution (coin, goods, services, or labor paid to an injured party or enclave)
- ◆ Trade Sanctions (denial of access to markets, docks, or services)
- ◆ Edict of Restriction (forbidding certain actions, locations, or dealings)
- ◆ Forced Labor (usually assigned by Gral’t’hune or Durrak)
- ◆ Imprisonment (short-term holding only; long-term incarceration is rare)

- ◆ Exile from Nunglthil (temporary or permanent, escorted)
- ◆ Public Stripping of Favor Badge
- ◆ Execution (exceedingly rare; reserved for existential threats)

Imprisonment is generally viewed as wasteful in the Underdark and is avoided unless no other solution preserves order.

Crimes Against an Enclave

Crimes committed within an enclave's space or against its people fall primarily under that enclave's authority.

Punishments vary widely by culture.

Gral'thune – The Strongback

- ◆ Emphasizes restitution, labor, and public accountability
- ◆ Violence against the enclave often results in forced labor, loss of Favor, or exile
- ◆ Repeat offenders are barred permanently from Gral'thune trade

Selraeth – The Silken Ward

- ◆ Punishments are severe, quiet, and precise
- ◆ Offenses may result in disappearance from trade, poison-oaths, or long exile
- ◆ Public punishment is rare; consequences are felt through isolation and fear
- ◆ Punishment by death is more frequent with Selraeth

Kar'Solar – The Surface Quarter

- ◆ Enforces strict internal codes
- ◆ Punishments include financial ruin, expulsion from guild protection, or quiet elimination
- ◆ Crimes that threaten trade or neutrality are punished harshly

Durrak – The Ironbound

- ◆ Law is contractual and rigid
- ◆ Violations result in seizure of assets, debt-bond labor, or permanent trade bans
- ◆ Betrayal of contract is considered one of the gravest offenses

Glimmerdel – The Glow Borough

- ◆ Punishments focus on social exclusion, loss of communal trust, and Favor removal
- ◆ Repeat or severe offenders are quietly expelled
- ◆ Violence within Glimmerdel is extremely rare and met with unified response

Crimes Against Nunglthil – Pact Violations

Crimes that threaten neutrality, shared spaces, or survival are considered crimes against Nunglthil itself and are judged by the Pact Council.

Grave Offenses

- ◆ Murder in neutral zones
- ◆ Sabotage of docks or defenses
- ◆ Inciting enclave war
- ◆ Demon worship or summoning
- ◆ Poisoning shared water or food supplies

Typical Punishments: Permanent exile, total loss of Favor, seizure of assets, or execution if Nunglthil is endangered.

Major Offenses

- ◆ Theft in shared markets
- ◆ Espionage against an enclave
- ◆ Repeated violence or threats
- ◆ Smuggling that destabilizes trade

Typical Punishments: Restitution, trade bans, forced labor, stripping of Favor, temporary exile.

Minor Offenses

- ◆ Disorderly conduct
- ◆ Weapon brandishing
- ◆ Fraud or deception
- ◆ Violation of edicts

Typical Punishments: Fines, restitution, edicts, temporary loss of access or Favor.

Economy and Trade

Nunglthil exists for one purpose above all others: trade without bloodshed. Its position along the brackish waters of Rothenloch and the river that flows deeper into the Underdark makes it a rare and indispensable waypoint between subterranean realms and the surface world. Goods, information, and influence pass through its docks as readily as coin, and its continued survival depends on the strict maintenance of neutrality. Trade here is governed as much by reputation—known locally as Favor—as by currency, with long-standing relationships often outweighing raw wealth.

Rather than operating as a unified market, Nunglthil's economy is shaped by its five pact-bound enclaves, each contributing distinct goods and services while guarding their autonomy.

- ◆ Gral'thune forms the settlement's industrial backbone, providing metalworking, stonecraft, raw materials, escort services, and oversight of Nunglthil's defenses.
- ◆ Selraeth trades in rare fungi, fine silks, poisons, magical components, and high-value secrets, weaving political influence as deftly as fabric.

- ◆ Kar'Solar handles the gray-market flow of relics, salvaged artifacts, illicit enchantments, and smuggled surface goods, operating under strict internal codes that protect trade stability.
- ◆ Durrak specializes in masterwork weapons, armor, and precision trade contracts, valuing profit and enforceable agreements above all else.
- ◆ Glimmerdel excels in gemcraft, fungal alchemy, delicate charms, trinkets, and navigation routes, and is often the first to detect threats to trade or neutrality.

Together, these enclaves form a tightly interdependent economic system where no single group can dominate without endangering the whole. Occasional feuds and rivalries flare, but open disruption of trade is swiftly punished, for all who dwell in Nunglthil understand the same truth: if commerce fails here, survival soon follows.

Religion

Religion in Nunglthil is practiced quietly, personally, and without dominance. As a settlement founded on survival, neutrality, and cooperation among disparate peoples, Nunglthil does not elevate any single deity, pantheon, or creed above another. Instead, it recognizes the importance of faith as a stabilizing force and permits worship so long as it does not threaten the Pact of Neutrality or the safety of the settlement. Open proselytizing, coercive rites, or divine mandates that call for violence are not tolerated.

At the heart of religious life stands the Dais of Devotion, a large communal chamber open to all faiths. Its circular altar—broken into four marble quarters—bears carvings of symbols from both Old Gods and New Order deities, as well as lesser-known or regional powers. Candles, flammable fungi, and small trinket offerings are constantly renewed by worshippers. No clergy permanently preside over the Dais; instead, individuals come to pray, meditate, or perform simple rites in their own manner. On rare occasions, itinerant priests or mystics may lead brief observances, but none are permitted to claim authority over the space.

Faith in Nunglthil tends toward practical devotion rather than elaborate ritual. Many residents honor deities of protection, endurance, trade, craftsmanship, guidance, or fate—gods whose domains align with the realities of Underdark life. Some offer prayers before journeys or negotiations; others seek solace after loss or failure. It is also common for travelers to light a candle at the Dais upon arrival, acknowledging both the dangers they have survived and those yet to come. In Nunglthil, belief is respected, but it is action—keeping the Pact, honoring Favor, and protecting the fragile peace—that is considered the truest expression of devotion.

Layout

Nunglthil is carved directly into the cliffside bordering Rothenloch and arranged in four distinct layers. Stone stairwells, and switchback ramps connect the layers, allowing movement without exposing the settlement to uncontrolled access.

The Main Layer forms the heart of Nunglthil's activity. Here, wide docks line both the lake's edge and the interior cavern where Rothenloch's waters flow inward and feed the river beyond. Boats and cargo platforms crowd the harbor, while shops, trade halls, and small enclave offices are carved into the surrounding rock. This layer is loud, busy, and perpetually lit by fungus braziers and lanterns. Several shops facing the lake or cavern include internal staircases that rise into private upper floors, blending commerce and residence within the same carved spaces.

The Second Layer serves primarily as a residential tier and overlooks the harbor cavern below. Balconies, railings, and carved viewing platforms allow residents to observe dock activity from above. Most long-term inhabitants of Nunglthil live here, along with the second-floor guest rooms of the Darkbottom Draught inn and tavern. The layer is quieter and more orderly than the docks below, with narrow walkways branching into communal housing, private quarters, and upper shop levels connected to the main trade floor.

The Third Layer is markedly smaller and more controlled. It contains higher-status residences, secure chambers, and the Pact Council Chamber, where representatives of the five enclaves meet to govern matters affecting Nunglthil as a whole. Windows and narrow overlooks peer out across Rothenloch, offering both prestige and discretion. Access to this layer is restricted and often monitored, reinforcing its political and symbolic importance.

Above all rests the Fourth Layer, consisting of a single fortified lookout chamber overlooking Rothenloch. This post is used to monitor traffic on the lake, watch for threats approaching from the water, and signal warnings to the guards.

Notable Locations

Armstack

Armstack is a well-lit arms and armor shop in Nunglthil, notable for its brightness and for the sheer density of weaponry on display. The shop is operated by Reddig Oddbrow, a talkative duergar from the city of Dhaltarune who thrives on conversation as much as commerce. Reddig maintains a close working relationship with the Doomhorn smiths of Firmforge, and the majority of his stock consists of their weapons and armor. Supplementing this are pieces acquired through trade—items sold by travelers, guards, and adventurers passing through Nunglthil.

To showcase his wares, Reddig has lined the shop’s walls with polished ivory marble, making Armstack one of the brightest interiors in the settlement when illuminated by the numerous sconces placed throughout. Armor stands and weapon racks are arranged densely but intentionally, mixing functional gear with more decorative pieces to catch the eye. Reddig encourages browsing, often launching into stories about where a piece came from or how it performed in the field. While his demeanor is friendly and open, his prices are firm, and he expects customers to respect the craftsmanship behind every item.

Light spills from a marble-lined storefront, reflecting off polished metal and stone. Rows of armor and weapon stands are visible even from the threshold. The interior is bright and almost gleaming, ivory marble walls reflecting the glow of multiple sconces. Weapons and armor stand shoulder to shoulder, arranged in tight but deliberate clusters. A gray dwarf greets you eagerly.

Coppereyes Gemcraft

Coppereyes Gemcraft is the premier gemcutting and jewel-trading establishment in Nunglthil, operated by Scalimank Coppereyes under the watchful authority of his aunt, Antadda Coppereyes — the leader of Glimmerdel. The shop occupies a prominent position just a few doors to the right of the trading post area in Nunglthil’s main cavern, marked by soft blue fungus-lanterns that illuminate intricately carved stone signage. Inside, the store is a blend of meticulous svirfneblin design and cautious Underdark security: reinforced stone counters, illusion-warded display cases, and glow-crystal sconces that highlight each gemstone with magical clarity.

Scalimank runs the day-to-day operations with precision bordering on obsession. He offers masterfully cut gems, enchanted stones, and appraisal services, and deals in rare materials sourced from both surface and deep Underdark mines. His status — and the backing of Antadda — grants the shop considerable political weight. Customers seeking unique stones or high-value exchanges often need to present adequate “favor” or reputable references. The shop is also a quiet node of influence within Glimmerdel; Antadda uses it to monitor trade shifts across all enclaves and to subtly assert her authority without leaving her own ward.

Approaching the store ...

Set along the well-lit stretch of the main cavern, a neatly carved stone storefront displays a glowing sign of a stylized crystal eye. Soft blue light spills from the doorway, shimmering over polished stone steps that lead inside.

Entering the store ...

The air is cool and crisp, carrying the faint scent of mineral dust. Rows of crystal-lit cases line the walls, each displaying brilliant gems that glitter under illusion-woven light. A sharp-eyed deep gnome stands behind a polished stone counter, his hands resting on precision tools of gemcutting.

Dais of Devotion (alter house)

The Dais of Devotion is Nunglthil’s central place of worship—an enclave-neutral chamber where all faiths, surface or Underdark, may honor their gods without judgment or interference. The room is large, and carved entirely from natural stone, softened by cushions, woven mats, and clusters of braziers placed against the walls. Its centerpiece is a wide, elevated dais supporting a massive circular altar of white marble streaked with gold veining. The altar itself is divided into four equal quarters, leaving cross-shaped passages so worshipers can walk freely into the open middle. Both the inner and outer walls of the altar are intricately carved with symbols representing dozens of deities from Myrdae—some ancient and nearly forgotten, others commonly worshiped today.

The 4-foot-wide altar ring is covered with burning candles, flammable glow-fungi, small offerings, handwritten prayers, and trinkets left in reverence. The chamber’s illumination relies entirely on candlelight, creating a warm, flickering, golden glow that reflects off the marble and the polished stone floor. No enclave claims authority over the Dais, and violent acts committed here carry severe social consequences. Many come seeking comfort, guidance, or anonymity. The room is kept clean and orderly by rotating volunteers from all the enclaves, reinforcing its status as neutral and sacred ground.

The chamber opens into a wide, square room, only that you are entering from a corner. It is lit only by hundreds of candles arranged on a great marble altar-ring streaked with gold. The altar is broken into four equal sections, allowing you to walk through narrow passages into an open center surrounded by carved symbols of many gods. Cushions, low seats, and quiet braziers line the outer walls, inviting worshipers of every faith to kneel, sit, and offer devotion in peaceful silence.

Darkbottom Draught

Darkbottom Draught is the only inn and tavern in Nunglthil, located on the bottom layer near the cavern's dockside platforms. It serves as both a gathering place and a neutral refuge used by traders, mercenaries, enclave delegates, and travelers making the long descent into the Underdark. Faffi, a heavysset and sharp-tongued female ulbin, owns and runs the establishment with a tight hand and a warm laugh. She manages the rooms, keeps the books, and maintains order alongside her adopted quaggoth bodyguards, Thak and Drogan.

The tavern includes a large common hall, a dock-facing bar space, an adjoining kitchen run by the elderly human cook Gark, and three private rooms used for business or gatherings. Two of these remain freely rentable, but the third has been secured for several stretches by the drow gambler Cadafynn Xil'tagga, who runs controlled gaming sessions from it. Faffi is assisted by two workers — Tikrin, a young male ulbin, and Bahwa, a mountain dwarf — who help serve food, maintain rooms, and keep an eye on questionable patrons. Darkbottom Draught is known as one of the safest public spaces in Nunglthil due to the combination of its owner's reputation and the silent but intimidating presence of Thak and Drogan.

Approaching the tavern ...

Carved into the cavern wall above the dockside walkways, Darkbottom Draught glows with soft blue lantern-fungus. Warm light spills from carved stone windows, and the steady murmur of conversation echoes over the black waters of Rothenloch. A wooden sign with dark paint and glowing blue script marks the entrance.

Entering the tavern ...

Inside, the tavern feels unexpectedly warm for the Underdark. Bioluminescent lanterns cast a blue-green glow across rough-hewn stone pillars and wooden tables. A heavysset ulbin woman works behind the bar while a pair of quaggoths watch the room from the shadows near a side wall. The scent of spiced fungus-stew and sizzling fish drifts in from a side kitchen, and stone doors line the back wall leading to private rooms.

Deep Desires (escort)

Deep Desires is a discreet but unmistakable escort house operating from a garishly decorated storefront on the main layer of Nunglthil, with private rooms occupying the second level above. The establishment fulfills a demand common to long-term travelers, traders, and residents of the Underdark.

The business is owned and managed by Madam Naranda Onn’bane, a high elf woman originally from the surface city of Nurador. Naranda is shrewd, calculating, and acutely aware of the social currents within Nunglthil. Though the establishment’s presentation is flamboyant and poorly maintained—overdressed with clashing fabrics, excessive tapestries, and faded ornamentation—Naranda is meticulous about enforcing rules behind closed doors. Escort services are carefully regulated, payments are made upfront, and disputes are swiftly contained to avoid drawing enclave attention.

A riot of color spills from the storefront—mismatched lanterns and painted signage that promises pleasures best kept quiet. The scent of incense and perfume lingers heavily in the air. The interior is dim and overly ornate, with worn rugs, fraying drapery, and too many cushions competing for space. A man and a woman lounge near the entrance, clearly accustomed to appraising newcomers. A narrow staircase leads upward to private rooms, its banister polished smooth by frequent use.

Durrak Den

The Durrak Den serves as the administrative and commercial nerve center of the Durrak enclave, positioned deliberately between Armstack and Firmforge along the docks overlooking Rothenloch. The Den is austere and uncompromising, projecting authority through order rather than decoration.

Inside, the space is carved with exacting lines and reinforced stonework. Heavy desks, iron-edged tables, and lock-sealed cabinets dominate the room. Trade contracts, pricing ledgers, and production schedules are maintained with meticulous care. The duergar who work here value efficiency above all else; negotiations are brief, precise, and final once concluded.

A stark stone frontage sits between forge and armory, its entrance reinforced with iron bands. Nothing about it invites lingering. The interior is cool and sharply ordered. Heavy tables hold neatly stacked ledgers, weights, and sealed contracts. Every surface is clear except what is required, and the silence feels intentional.

Non-Player Characters

The Durrak administrator (varies), a duergar official responsible for overseeing contracts, and enclave correspondence.

Firmforge (smithy)

Firmforge occupies the far right edge of Nunglthil’s dock line, positioned so its smoke vent opens directly out over Rothenloch. The shop is built for function rather than comfort: natural stone walls, soot-darkened ceilings, and a square forge set firmly in the center of the space. A broad iron vent rises straight upward from the forge, carrying heat and smoke out toward the lake.

The forge is operated by two duergar smiths of the Doomhorn clan from the duergar city of Dhaltarune. Ernihm focuses on decorative and designer pieces—etched armor, balanced blades, and weapons meant to impress as much as they perform. Kolfo, by contrast, produces traditional, heavy-duty gear built to endure prolonged use in harsh conditions. Three anvils stand around the forge, while the back of the shop is stacked with sorted piles of ore and ingots awaiting refinement.

Heat radiates from a door at the edge of the docks. The air is hot and heavy with metal and coal. A square forge burns in the center of the room beneath a wide vent, while three anvils surround it, each scarred by countless blows. Two gray-skinned dwarves work in silence.

NPC	Description
Ernihm Doomhorn (Durrak) Owner	male duergar He is lean for his kind, with a sharp eye for balance and detail. He favors etched designs and finely finished pieces.
Kolfo Doomhorn (Durrak) Co-owner	male duergar A broad and heavy set duergar, producing thick, reliable weapons and armor built for endurance rather than ornament.

The smiths can fashion, adjust and repair most standard arms and armor, but newly crafted items are sent to Armstack for purchase.

Fishery & Smokehouse

The Fishery & Smokehouse is a two-level operation perched along the left side of Nunglthil’s docks, overlooking the dark waters of Rothenloch. It serves as the primary hub for the handling, preparation, and preservation of the lake’s catch, supplying both daily meals and long-lasting provisions for residents, traders, and expeditions traveling deeper into the Underdark. The lower level opens directly onto the docks, allowing fishing crews to unload fresh catch quickly before spoilage can set in.

The business is run by Sorgy and Situ Saurtusk, half-orc twin sisters originally from the surface town of Sulport. Though visibly orc-blooded, they have fairer skin than most and share dark auburn hair worn in practical braids. The twins divide responsibilities without dispute: one manages intake, sales, and customer interaction on the dockside floor, while the other oversees smoking, curing, and long-term preservation above. Their sister, Shanog, spends most days fishing on Rothenloch and is a reliable supplier to the Smokehouse.

They have a Waste-Nothing Policy, where bones, skins, and oils are sold or traded to alchemists, leatherworkers, and Glimmerdel artisans.

A sharp, savory scent of smoke and brine drifts from a stone-fronted building near the docks. Racks of drying nets and hanging fish line the exterior, and faint smoke curls from vents above. The lower floor is cool and damp, with stone slabs holding freshly cleaned fish packed in salt and chilled water. A small wooden counter displays wrapped portions of cooked or smoked fish ready to eat. Overhead, warm smoke and the crackle of fire drift down from the upper level, where preservation racks and braziers work constantly.

Glimmerdel Center

The Glimmerdel Center functions as the operational heart of the Glimmerdel enclave, coordinating trade, security alerts, and community affairs for the svirfneblin of Nunglthil. Unlike more austere enclave offices, the Center blends practicality with warmth, reflecting Glimmerdel's emphasis on cooperation and foresight. From this office, routes are tracked, gem and alchemical exchanges are scheduled, and early warnings are disseminated when danger threatens.

The interior is organized but welcoming. Low desks and worktables are arranged for collaboration. Charmed lanterns and softly glowing fungi provide steady illumination without harsh light. Records are kept meticulously, often redundantly, ensuring continuity even if a single ledger is lost.

A modest stone entrance glows with gentle light, its doorway framed by faintly luminescent crystal inlays. The atmosphere feels calm, alert, and welcoming. Low tables hold ledgers, tools, and softly glowing stones.

Non-Player Characters

The Glimmerdel administrator (varies), a svirfneblin official responsible for overseeing contracts, and enclave correspondence.

Guardhouse

The Guardhouse is a functional Gral'Thune outpost positioned along the edge of the docks on Rothenloch, carved directly into the cavern wall near the entrance to Nunglthil's inner harbor area. Its placement allows Gral'thune patrols to monitor traffic moving between the open docks and the interior of the settlement.

The interior is sparse and practical. A few heavy tables and chairs provide space for reports, briefings, and rest between patrols. Weapon racks line the walls, holding spare arms, shields, and tools used during dock duty. Members of Gral'thune—ulbin and dwarves alike—rotate through the Guardhouse at all hours, checking in at the start and end of patrols, exchanging information, and responding swiftly to disturbances in shared spaces. The Guardhouse does not function as a jail; those detained are transferred to the Holding if necessary.

A broad stone opening near the inner harbor is marked by stacked weapons and watchful figures. The space feels orderly, controlled, and quietly alert. The chamber is plain and utilitarian. Tables scarred by use sit beneath low lantern light, while racks of spears, shields, and crossbows line the walls. Guards pause their conversations just long enough to assess you before returning to their duties.

Non-Player Characters

Various members of Gral'Thune can be found here as patrols rotate shifts.

Holding, The

The Holding is one of Nunglthil’s most functional and tightly controlled spaces, designed to serve multiple necessary but unsentimental purposes. It functions primarily as a stable and holding ground for Underdark mounts—most notably Leatherback giant lizards—while also containing a small number of secure holding cells for prisoners, dangerous individuals, or those awaiting judgment under the Pact. The space is maintained and guarded by members of Gral’Thune, reinforcing its role as neutral, orderly, and firmly enforced.

The area is overseen by Tholumn Blaregut, a seasoned dwarf. The chamber is large, carved for efficiency rather than comfort. One wall is dominated by a broad stable area fitted with iron rings, heavy posts, and reinforced stone troughs suitable for massive mounts. Supplies—feed, tack, chains, and repair tools—are stacked neatly in one corner. Opposite the stables stand a row of solid stone-and-iron holding cells, secure enough for both humanoid prisoners and restrained creatures. Three tunnels connect the Holding to the rest of Nunglthil: one leading toward the central harbor, another toward Nassy’s Necessities, and a larger, heavily barred passage descending deeper into the Underdark.

The tunnel opens into a large stone chamber, the air thick with the smell of animals, oil, and worked iron. Heavy gates and worn tracks mark this place as one of constant movement. One wall is lined with massive stone posts and tether rings where hulking lizard mounts rest and shift. Across from them, iron-barred cells are set into the rock, stark and secure.

Non-Player Characters

NPC	Description
Tholumn Blaregut (Gral’Thune) Supervisor	male dwarf He is broad and thick-bearded, with a gravelly voice and an unyielding sense of duty. He values order, safety, and adherence to the Pact above all else.

Boarding a mount is a standard 5 silver pieces per night and involves feeding and standard care.

Miss Placed Tomes

Miss Placed Tomes is a tall, quiet bookshop situated just to the left of the Darkbottom Draught, its calm deliberately contrasting the tavern’s noise. The shop is run by Dririel Auveqerynn, an elderly drow scholar and author whose reputation extends well beyond Nunglthil. Dririel is deeply well read and has penned several works of fiction that many claim verge on prophecy—political intrigues of drow houses laced with subtle horror and unsettling foresight. Rumors persist that his writings are influenced, directly or indirectly, by Eredra, though Dririel neither confirms nor denies such claims.

The shop’s interior rises high, with a loft running along all four walls, accessed by a spiral staircase tucked into one corner. The ground floor is meticulously organized with shelves arranged by subject—history, arcana, religion, travel, fiction, and forbidden texts. The loft contains small reading alcoves, each designed for quiet study and reflection. Dririell enforces strict silence, removing disruptive patrons without hesitation. He opens early and closes early, intentionally avoiding the louder evening hours brought on by the neighboring tavern. Though he eagerly purchases any book he has not read—often paying handsomely—he parts with his own tomes only at a price slightly above their assessed value. A pot of Deepbreath Infused Tea from Soothing Spores is always warm and freely offered to respectful patrons.

Dririell’s past is known only in whispers. As a young archivist in the drow city of Vel’Drezadon, he earned the derisive nickname “Miss Placed” for his habit of misfiling books, drawing the ire of his matriarch. The story ends in blood and exile. Dririell left the city carrying only his original collection—books that still form the core of Miss Placed Tomes.

A tall, narrow shop stands beside the tavern, its windows dim and orderly. The sign above the door bears careful lettering and none of the noise spills inside. The air is calm and smells faintly of old parchment and steeped tea. Shelves of books rise neatly around you, while above, a lofted gallery circles the room with quiet reading alcoves tucked into the walls. A silver-haired drow in matching robes strolls about.

Nassy’s Necessities (general goods)

Nassy’s Necessities is one of the largest and most frequented stores in Nunglthil, occupying a strategic position between the docks of Rothenloch and the interior passages of the settlement. Its front entrance opens directly onto the harbor platforms, making it an easy stop for sailors and dockworkers, while a long tunnel-like hallway at the rear connects the store to inner Nunglthil, ensuring constant foot traffic from residents and traders alike.

The shop is owned and operated by Nassy Sternbelcher, a duergar whose approach to commerce is blunt, efficient, and unapologetically practical. The interior is cluttered but purposeful: goods are stacked on shelves, piled in crates, draped across tables, or hung from hooks wherever space allows. Nothing is decorative, everything is useful. Nassy keeps meticulous mental track of inventory and prices, and while she offers no pleasantries, her fairness and reliability have earned her a reliable reputation. Nassy’s Necessities is often the first place newcomers visit to outfit themselves, and the last stop for those preparing to leave Nunglthil.

A wide stone storefront opens onto the docks, crates and barrels stacked just inside. A painted sign promises supplies for any journey, and a steady flow of customers moves in and out. The shop is crowded with goods—rope, tools, rations, lamps, crates of hardware, bundles of cloth—all arranged wherever they fit. A gray-skinned dwarf watches catches you as you enter.

Needle on Rothenloch

Needle on Rothenloch is a tattoo and piercing establishment operating under a multi-enclave accord, jointly represented by Gral’Thune, Selraeth, Kar’Solar, and Glimmerdel. The interior is clean, controlled, and quiet. Stone walls are broken by hanging panels of treated hide and cloth displaying design motifs drawn from all four enclaves—tribal geometry, elegant sigils, coded symbols, and crystalline patterns. A shallow basin of dark water taken from Rothenloch sits near the entrance, used ceremonially to cleanse tools before and after each marking. Each operator works within their own discipline and cultural tradition, but all adhere to strict shared rules: no coercion, no false Favor marks, and no work performed on the unwilling or unstable. Violations are reported directly to the Pact Council.

A low-lit stone frontage overlooks the inner harbor docks, its sign marked only by a simple needle motif above rippling water. The space feels solemn rather than inviting. The air smells faintly of clean stone and treated ink. Soft light reflects off tools laid out with careful precision. Designs hang quietly along the walls, each different in style but equal in importance. Whoever enters is studied carefully before being addressed.

Tissill Pebblechi tattoo artist	female svirfneblin The Glimmerdel artist specializes in mineral-based inks, crystalline pigments, and faintly luminescent markings, often tied to memory, healing, or guidance. Their work is calm and methodical.

Paths by Stonesniff (guide & mapmaker)

Paths by Stonesniff is a small, cluttered shop in Nunglthil devoted almost entirely to the mapping, recording, and interpretation of Underdark routes. Surface maps are rare here; Bolshack Stonesniff’s expertise lies below the world, charting tunnels, forgotten caverns, submerged passages, and unstable regions shaped by time, magic, or collapse. The shop itself resembles a curated hoard more than a storefront, filled with oddities gathered from across the Underdark—stuffed bats suspended from rafters, paintings of distant settlements, mineral samples, and a reinforced display case crafted from umberhulk shell.

At the center of the shop stands Bolshack’s pride: a large, flat white mushroom that has been hardened or petrified, serving as his primary map table. Most of his valuable charts are not openly displayed. Instead, they are kept locked within a row of reinforced lockboxes along the far wall, positioned beneath a massive stuffed giant spider suspended from the ceiling. The spider’s lifelike posture unsettles newcomers, and Bolshack makes no effort to reassure them. He is selective about access to his maps, requiring either sufficient Favor, strong justification, or personal interest before revealing his collection.

A narrow storefront packed with strange curios catches your eye—odd shapes press against the windows, and something large and many-legged hangs just inside, casting a distorted shadow. The shop is dense with objects and smells of dust, mineral oil, and old parchment. A pale, flat-topped mushroom table dominates the center of the room, its surface etched with faint lines and marks. Lockboxes line the far wall beneath a suspended giant spider that looks ready to drop at any moment.

Post of Kar'Solar

The Post of Kar'Solar serves as the administrative hub and coordination office for the Kar'Solar enclave, representing surface folk interests within Nunglthil. Though widely rumored to be a den of thieves and smugglers, the Post itself is orderly, controlled, and deliberately understated. From this office, Kar'Solar manages trade contacts, surface routes, internal codes of conduct, and the quiet arbitration of disputes that could otherwise destabilize Nunglthil's neutrality.

The interior balances practicality with discretion. Ledgers are kept under lock and sigil, messages arrive through trusted couriers rather than public posting, and meetings are arranged by invitation. The Post is not heavily guarded in appearance, but anyone with experience in the Underdark quickly senses that it is watched. The Post ensures that Kar'Solar's gray-market dealings remain profitable without crossing the lines that would invite Pact Council intervention.

A plain stone frontage bears a weathered emblem that appears like a black sun. The doorway is unassuming. The interior is sparse and functional. A central table holds sealed letters and trade manifests, while shelves of coded ledgers line the walls.

Non-Player Characters

The Kar'Solar administrator (varies), officials responsible for overseeing contracts, and enclave correspondence.

Scales to Skin

Scales to Skin is a modest but respected leatherworking shop in Nunglthil, known for its quality craftsmanship and distinctive materials. The interior is tall and open, with a ceiling rising nearly fifteen feet overhead. Anchored along the upper walls are petrified wood limbs, arranged in a branching pattern that gives the impression of standing beneath a leafless tree—an intentional design choice reflecting the owner's surface origins. The far wall is lined with carefully displayed leather samples in a wide range of colors and textures, while the left side of the shop holds neatly stacked hides and prepared leathers awaiting use. The right side features shelves and hooks displaying finished goods ready for sale.

The shop is run by Ahlea Shadestalker, a wood elf from the surface settlement of Shademeadow. Though an accomplished hunter, Ahlea devotes most of her time to crafting leather goods rather than pursuing the hunt herself. Her specialty lies in working with the hides of giant Slumber Newts native to Rothenloch—creatures whose smooth black skin carries subtle indigo tones under certain lighting. Assisting her is Odjo Longwort, an elderly male gabük from the Meadowgarde hills. Odjo maintains the shop’s supply lines, using his long-standing relationships with fishers, hunters, and traders to secure high-quality pelts.

A tall, narrow storefront opens beneath stone walls where pale, branch-like shapes stretch along the upper edges. The scent of cured leather and treated hides drifts softly from within. The room opens upward, the ceiling high above and framed by petrified wood limbs that resemble the bare branches of a dead tree. A broad worktable of pale hardwood dominates the center of the shop, cluttered with knives, cords, awls, and half-finished pieces. Along the walls, hides of many shades hang beside finished belts, armor pieces, gloves, and packs.

Seafarer’s Supplies

Seafarer’s Supplies is a practical, well-stocked outfitter located at the far end of the docks on the left side of Nunglthil’s main harbor, overlooking the dark waters of Rothenloch. The shop caters to anyone who makes their living on the lake or the river beyond it, providing gear for navigation, fishing, maintenance, and survival on brackish Underdark waters.

The shop is owned and operated by Ronsen “Rigger” Drace, a surface-born human from the settlement of Mulshear and a long-time member of Kar’Solar. Ronsen is experienced, pragmatic, and deeply familiar with the dangers of Rothenloch. His wife, Phoebe, a half-elf, assists with sales, inventory, and customer relations, often acting as the more personable face of the business. Together they maintain strong ties with dockworkers, fishers, and caravan crews.

A sturdy wooden storefront clings to the stone at the end of the docks, ropes and nets hanging from iron hooks along the wall. Lantern light spills out across the planks, and the smell of oil, damp wood, and lakewater hangs in the air.

The shop is cramped but orderly, its walls lined with coils of rope, floats, nets, poles, and sealed crates. A broad-shouldered human with weathered features sorts gear behind the counter while a half-elf woman checks a ledger nearby. Everything here looks used, tested, and dependable.

Seat of Salraeth

The Seat of Salraeth serves as the administrative and diplomatic office of the Selraeth enclave within Nunglthil. Unlike the enclave’s more public-facing establishments, this location is deliberately understated—designed to blend into the surrounding stone and avoid drawing attention. From here, Selraeth manages trade agreements, negotiates discreet arrangements, and monitors political currents both within Nunglthil and beyond.

The interior is orderly and precise. Records of trade, contracts, and favors are maintained in coded ledgers and enchanted documents, many of which are kept in locked cabinets or sealed alcoves. Meetings held here are rarely spontaneous; most visitors arrive by appointment or invitation. While the office does not appear overtly guarded, Selraeth agents are always nearby, and the space is warded against eavesdropping. The Silken Ledger is where Selraeth’s influence is quietly measured, adjusted, and extended—without blades ever needing to be drawn.

A narrow stone doorway bears no sign or symbol, only a subtle silver thread motif carved into the rock. The area is quiet, with little foot traffic. The room is dim and meticulously arranged. Smooth stone walls are broken by shelves of scroll cases and slim ledgers, each labeled in elegant script. A low table and several high-backed chairs dominate the center, while soft violet light glows from shaded lanterns overhead.

Non-Player Characters

The Selraeth administrator (varies), a drow official responsible for overseeing contracts, and enclave correspondence.

Silken Secrets

Silken Secrets is one of the most alluring and quietly dangerous establishments in Nunglthil, operated by the Selraeth enclave. The shop is known for its exquisite drow craftsmanship—fabrics that shimmer like moonlit silk, exotic clothing from the deep Underdark, and tailored pieces designed for nobles, performers, diplomats, and those who simply crave luxury. The storefront is tastefully understated, but inside the atmosphere transforms into one of dim violet light, warm shadows, and sensuous elegance. Violet and silver drapery hangs from carved niches, and the entire floor is covered in a plush, tightly woven cloth that muffles footsteps and exudes warmth beneath the feet.

The front half of the shop focuses on high-quality attire, rare textiles, and eccentric fashion pieces unique to drow artisanship. The back half, accessible through a shimmering curtain of silver-threaded lace, is dedicated to the more dangerous pleasures: poisons disguised as perfumes, oils that seduce or sting, pheromonal essences, paralytics hidden in scented vials, and toxins stored in ornate, decorative flasks. The shop is meticulously curated and its wares expensive; Szoradryn of House Yerenduhl runs Silken Secrets with suave charm and cutting discernment. He has no patience for those who treat his work as trivial and will dismiss unserious visitors with cold politeness. Behind the charm is a calculating mind, fully aware of who buys what—and why.

Soft violet light spills from an elegant doorway framed in silver-threaded cloth. A faint mix of perfume, incense, and something sharper lingers in the air. The sign above the door displays a stylized silver spider resting atop cascading ribbons of silk.

Inside, the shop is dim and warm, illuminated by muted violet lanterns that cast soft shadows across racks of shimmering fabrics and fine clothing. The floor beneath your feet is a dense, plush tapestry that silences every step. A tall, impeccably dressed drow studies you with a measured, charming smile—his silver eyes gleaming beneath perfectly arranged hair. Behind a silver-laced curtain, faint scents of perfume and something sharper drift from the hidden section of the shop.

Soothing Spores

Soothing Spores is a small but well-regarded specialty shop situated beside the market stalls in Nunglthil’s central harbor area. The space is intimate and densely arranged, with wall-mounted shelves and low display tables filled with jars, bundles, sachets, and carefully labeled containers of fungi-based remedies.

The shop is run solely by Nelka Niddlebom, an elderly female svirfneblin whose passion for fungi borders on reverence. Nelka speaks eagerly and at length about fungal species, their properties, and their proper use, and she is quick to correct misconceptions. While her public offerings focus on mild, practical remedies, she is deeply knowledgeable about more potent hallucinogenic and mind-altering fungi. Such items are never openly displayed and are only discussed with those she deems respectful, stable, and trustworthy. Nelka believes fungi are tools of balance—capable of healing, insight, or harm depending entirely on intent and preparation.

A small shop tucked beside the market stalls glows softly with jars of pale light and earthy colors. The air smells faintly of damp stone, herbs, and warm tea. Shelves crowd every wall, stacked with neatly labeled jars and bundles of dried fungi. Low tables display small tins of balm, wrapped tea packets, and bite-sized snacks. An elderly deep gnome peers up at you eagerly, already mid-thought about which fungus might suit your needs.

Storeroom

The Storeroom is a large, secure storage chamber attached directly to the Trading Stalls of Nunglthil, used by vendors who remain in the market for multiple days. It exists to reduce congestion in the harbor area and to provide a trusted place where goods can be kept between market sessions without the risk of theft or sabotage. Access to the Storeroom is strictly controlled by the Fungadyn family.

The chamber is sealed by a massive iron door that can only be opened by Droann Fungadyn or one of his sons, Padon or Kren. Inside, the space is open and uncluttered, with heavy stone flooring and reinforced shelving bolted into the walls to accommodate crates, barrels, sacks, and sealed containers. A Fungadyn is always present while the Storeroom is in use, overseeing the placement and removal of goods, recording access, and ensuring that items are neither tampered with nor exchanged without authorization.

A heavy iron door stands beside the Trading Stalls, its surface scarred and worn. Inside, the chamber beyond is spacious and orderly, with stone shelves lining the walls and wide open floor space for stacked crates and barrels. Everything feels accounted for.

Sweetspring (bathhouse)

Sweetspring Bathhouse is just to the right of Deep Desires along the main layer. Sweetspring preserves a natural Underdark aesthetic with a gently sloping, unworked tunnel leading inward to a single, broad, naturally rounded chamber dominated by a large spring-fed pool. Clear, warm freshwater flows steadily through the basin, entering from one side and exiting the other, ensuring constant renewal. Though the water is pristine, small, slow-moving cyclones circle the surface, keeping it perpetually rippled and obscuring the depths below.

The bathhouse is overseen by Cidus, a Storm Giant Goliath whose imposing size contrasts with his calm, attentive demeanor. He maintains order through presence alone, ensuring the space remains peaceful and inviolate. Bioluminescent cleaning fungi line the chamber walls; harvested and handed to bathers, the sponge-like growth gently cleans skin and hair without soap or scent.

A smooth, natural tunnel opens from the thoroughfare, warm air carrying the scent of clean stone and mineral water. Soft light glows faintly deeper within. The tunnel opens into a wide, circular cavern where a warm, clear pool fills the center of the room. Gentle currents ripple the surface, broken by small, swirling eddies that dance endlessly. Pale fungi glow along the walls, and a towering goliath watches quietly from the stone edge.

Trader's Tankard (pub)

The Trader's Tankard is a dockside pub overlooking Rothenloch, known for being quieter, dimmer, and more discreet than the Darkbottom Draught. While not overtly criminal, it attracts those who prefer private conversation, subtle deals, and minimal attention. The establishment has earned a reputation as a place where information changes hands as often as coin, making it a favored haunt of smugglers, middlemen, and traders who value discretion over revelry.

The interior is arranged around a rectangular bar positioned at the center of the room, with small, partially covered booths lining the walls. These booths allow for private discussions without complete isolation, striking a balance between secrecy and safety. Ormagg Sternbelcher, a duergar, tends the bar and enforces a strict no-performers policy—music, speeches, and spectacle are unwelcome. Lighting is kept low, voices are expected to remain measured, and Gral'thune guards rotate through the premises to ensure neutrality and prevent violence. When busy, low conversation and sharp banter fill the space; during quieter stretches, the pub can feel almost unnervingly silent.

A dimly lit doorway opens onto the docks, lantern light reflecting faintly off the dark water. The hum of conversation is muted, deliberate. The room is dark and subdued, centered around a long rectangular bar. Small booths line the walls, each offering partial cover. A gray dwarf watches from behind the bar.

Trading Stalls

The Trading Stalls is an open market area situated along the inner harbor docks of Nunglthil. The area consists of an expansive, cavernous platform with a smooth stone floor worn flat by constant foot traffic. Vendors arrive by boat or tunnel, erecting temporary stalls to buy, sell, and barter goods ranging from raw materials and foodstuffs to curiosities and salvaged finds. The market shifts daily in both layout and offerings.

Oversight of the Trading Stalls falls to Droann Fungadyn, a respected male ulbin from the settlement of Varrivir. Droann ensures that the Pact’s rules are followed—no violence, no fraud that threatens stability, and no obstruction of trade. His two sons, Padon and Kren, assist him by managing stall placements, collecting fees, monitoring disputes, and coordinating access to the attached Storeroom, a secured storage area where vendors staying multiple days may keep their goods between market days. The Trading Stalls are closely watched by Gral’thune, but Droann’s steady presence and reputation for fairness keep the market running smoothly.

A broad cavern opens onto the docks, its stone floor polished smooth by countless boots. Lanterns and fungus light flicker across rows of makeshift stalls and shifting crowds. Vendors, crates, tables, and cloth-covered stands fill the space. The smell of food, metal, damp stone, and unfamiliar goods mixes in the air. An ulbin with a practiced eye moves through the crowd, flanked by two younger helpers.
